BRITISH REGT'S HQ IN JERUSALEM ATTACKED

Netherlands Accepts U.S. Mediation Offer

Announcement Comes as Surprise To U.N. Council

Ready to Consult at Once To End War in Indonesia

Lake Success, Aug. 1 — (AP)— Dr. Eelco N. Van Kleffens, Netherlands Ambassador to Washington, told the United Nations security council today his government had accepted a United States offer to mediate the undeclared war in Indonesia.

He said he had been authorized by The Hague to say that The Netherlands "gladly accepts" the mediation offer and that his government is ready to enter into consultations with United States officials immediately.

His announcement came as a surprise.

As the council met to resume debate on Australian and Indian complaints on the Indonesian question, Van Kleffens had told a reporter The Netherlands government had not yet received a formal mediation offer.

"When and if we receive such an offer," he said, "I am quite sure we will accept it."

Herschel V. Johnson, United States deputy delegate, disclosed at the council session last night that the United States was offering to mediate the conflict.

Favors Acceptance

Batavia — (AP) — A. K. Gani, deputy premier of the Indonesian republic who is under Dutch arrest here, said today he believed his government would "gratefully accept" the United States offer to mediate in Indonesia if the Dutch would agree to return to the areas they held before smashing across Java and Sumatra.

Gani has been a prisoner for nearly two weeks in the house from which President Soekarno proclaimed Indonesia's independence two years ago. He said his personal opinion was that the republic favored American intervention and now after the Dutch "restore law and order."

RUSSIA ASKS COUNCIL TAKE "BINDING ACTION"

Lake Success, Aug. 1 (AP) — Russia charged today that a United States offer to mediate the undeclared war in Indonesia was a "means of circumventing" the United Nations and demanded that the Security Council itself take "binding" action.

The surprise Soviet move seriously complicated the mediation plan which already had been accepted by The Netherlands government.

Soviet delegate Andrei A. Gromyko agreed with the United States that the council should act immediately to order a cessation of hostilities, but he urged the council to go slow on the question of mediation.

Although not stating definitely that he would oppose mediation, Gromyko raised strong objections including his charge that the move would by-pass the U.N. He said it also would give the Dutch an advantage over the Indonesians because they could start the negotiations from their present military positions.

He charged The Netherlands government with a clear "breach of peace" and said the Security Council would be "shirking" its obligations if it failed to take a binding decision.

SILVER PHEASANT AT LARGE; LIKELY FROM SOME ZOO

New York, July 31 — (AP) — Early risers, paused and looked again today at a sleek-lang-tailed, silver-white bird about three feet long from head to sweepnng tail tripping laconically along Fifth Avenue.

A garbage collector gave cautious chase and the bird submitted to capture with dignity. An attendant for the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals said the bird was a male Silver pheasant — native of South China and possibly escaped from a zoo.

Booth Estate Set At $7,594,224

Ottawa, Aug. 1. (CP)—C. Jackson Booth, prominent Ottawa-lumberman who died last February, left an estate valued at $7,594,224, it was disclosed Wednesday when his will was filed for probate in Surrogate Court.

Income from the entire estate was bequeathed to his son, Charles Rowley Booth, Ottawa.

Redmond Code, solicitor for the estate, said he did not know how much succession duties on the estate would amount to but it was believed they would be between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000.

GMC Announces Price Increases

Detroit, Aug. 1 —(AP)— General Motors Corp. today announced a two-to-six-per-cent increase in the list prices of all passenger cars effective immediately.

"Price adjustments on specific models and body styles will be established individually by the divisions involved," the announcement said.

Cadillac, Buick, Oldsmobile, Pontiac and Chevrolet passenger cars were affected.

President C. E. Wilson said the company's first general price boost since last November was necessitated because "increased costs of both labor and materials now are too great for General Motors to possibly absorb through improved processing and the use of better machines and tools, or from any potential increase in volume."

He cited what he termed a 12-per-cent increase in labor costs because of April's wage agreement with the United Auto Workers (C.I.O.), as well as rising costs of steel, pig iron and other materials.

SILENCE SHROUDS MEETING OF CSU, SHIPPING FIRMS

Brockington Attempts To Smooth Out Their Differences to Avoid Strike, Court Action

Ottawa, Aug. 1 (CP)—A silence that gave no hint of either compromise or breakdown today shrouded the progress of meetings between representatives of the Canadian Seamen's Union and three Great Lakes Shipping Companies with a government conciliator attempting to smooth out their differences and avoid a possible strike and court action.

Leonard W. Brockington, government-appointed industrial disputes inquiries commissioner, held four meetings with representatives of the union and the Canada Steamship Lines and the Colonial and Sarnia Steamship Lines, Thursday on a dispute arising from a collective agreement signed last September.

The final meeting was held last night but when it was over Mr. Brockington would say only that the "proceedings have progressed". He added it was "quite likely" he would meet the parties again but gave no indication as to a definite date or place.

Further evidence that the meetings are at least temporarily suspended came when T. G. McManus, C. S. U. secretary, checke out of his hotel and apparently went back to Montreal without issuing any statement. Likewise, from the shipping operators there was nothing but silence.

Just before the last of yesterday's sessions, the conferees got word of a National Labor Relations Board decision on a C.S.U. request to take court action against the companies on the ground the union was refused passes to board ships owned by the three firms. The board gave the union permission to go to the courts but expressed the hope the parties would make a settlement without recourse to the courts.

Simultaneously the board refused the union permission to wage legal action against captains Scott Misener of the Colonial and and Sarnia Lines and Norman Reoch of Canada Steamships for allegedly offering McManus a $100,000 bribe last August to accept a contract on their terms. The companies denied the charge.

The union listed the pass issue as probably the top point of the dispute. Union officials have charged that the three companies are out to "wreck" the C.S.U.

The companies charge union leaders with being Communists and disseminating Communist propaganda.

ROYAL FAMILY RETURNS TO LONDON

Returning to London after their annual visit to Scotland, King George and Queen Elizabeth are shown with Princess Margaret Rose as they arrived at Euston Station. The young Princess is wearing a rather unusual, but pretty, off-the-face hat.

FIRST GROUP OF NEW SETTLERS TO START TRIP

Forty Settlers Will Travel by Plane and Will Land at Malton, Sunday

London, Aug. 1 (CP)—A transport airline taking off from Northolt airport near London tomorrow with 40 future Ontario settlers aboard "will make history as they are pioneers of the first mass emigration by air," said a statement issued today by Ontario House.

They are the first of 7,000 Britons flying to Ontario under a Provincial government plan aimed at meeting shortage in various industries. The statement said it is planned to fly three planes a week during early August, increasing the flights to 12 weekly in September and October until all are moved.

A Trans-Ocean airline plane is to carry the initial party and is due to land at Malton airport near Toronto Sunday.

It was because of this demand to migrate and the province's need for men that the air transport plan had been drawn up. The response to it was "most encouraging" and from 80 to 100 persons daily were being examined and cleared.

The transport arrangements were worked out between Trans-Canada air lines and Trans-Ocean, with T.C.A. sponsoring the flights.

"Ontario is carefully screening its emigrants," the Ontario House announcement continued. "It wants certain types and not others. It only wants some trades and is excercising caution because of the housing shortage in some of its larger cities. Each applicant is interviewed by a team of interviewers and about 10 per cent are rejected."

BEGIN DRAFTING POSSIBLE TERMS FOR NFLD. UNION

Report Will be Fairly Clear Statement of What Union Would Mean to Countries

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL.
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Aug. 1 —(CP)— The drafting of terms that would constitute a workable basis for the union of Newfoundland and Canada was begun today by representatives of the two countries as their six-week-old discussions moved out of the exploratory stage.

The representatives will draft a report on what the financial and constitutional position will be if the people of Newfoundland and the Canadian parliament agreed that union of the two countries is desireable.

It was agreed at a closed plenary meeting of the two delegations last night that sufficient information had been obtained in discussions and study since June 25 to permit the drafting of possible terms.

John Baldwin, member of the privy council staff and liaison officer between the two delegations, said the report of the terms committee would represent a reasonable clear statement of what the position would be if Newfoundland came in as a 10th province.

Financial Terms.

So far neither delegation has given an indication of what the possible financial terms of union might be. Figures mentioned in speculation in unofficial circles have placed the cost to the Dominion at amounts ranging from $10,000,000 to $100,000,000.

It is generally agreed by those close to the discussions that the first few years after union the cost to the Dominion would be heavy, but many of the charges would be of a non-recurring nature. For instance, the Dominion might agree to take over the Island's $78,000,000 public debt.

The taking over of the Newfoundland railway and water transportation system also would prove costly in the first few years.

In addition the Dominion might pay special subsidies for a time to bring the Island's health and other services up to a par with those in the existing provinces.

Besides there would have to be payment of the subsidies now provided for in the Canadian constitution and for those which might arise out of a taxation agreement, similar to the agreements already concluded with seven of the nine existing provinces.

ROYAL WEDDING TO BE CELEBRATED IN ABBEY NOV. 20

Ceremony Will Follow Ordinary Service Of Marriage of Church Of England

London, Aug. 1 (CP) —Princess Elizabeth is to have a late morning, Westminster Abbey wedding Nov. 20, and with that deadline set, court dressmakers, caterers and chaplains today settled down in earnest to preparation for the event.

Yesterday in a special meeting of the Imperial Privy Council at which representatives from the Commonwealth Dominions attended, the King formally approved her betrothal to Lieut. Philip Mountbatten of the Royal Navy— her friend from childhood.

The engagement received royal consent July 9. Yesterday's was a 175-year-old ritual, prescribed by the royal marriages act of 1772 laying down that descendants of King George II must ask royal permission to marry and that as a prerequisite the permission had to be "declared in council."

Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe, Canadian Reconstruction Minister, was formally sworn in as a member of the Imperial Privy Council immediately before yesterday's meeting so that he could be entitled to participate representing Canada. He was named to the council in June of last year but the meeting yesterday was his first chance to be installed.

A special supplement to the London Gazette last night set forth the session, at which the King bowed and said simply, "approved" when Princess Elizabeth's petition for permission to marry Mountbatten was presented.

Princess Elizabeth still has not revealed whom she has chosen to design her bridal wear. London socialites are aflutter to learn, while two or three of the more notable are known to be preparing designs "in case."

The wedding will represent least difficulty for the ecclesiastical authorities.

Very Rev. Dr. Alan Campbell, Dean of Westminster, said yesterday, "there will be nothing out of the ordinary about it. We have various precedents to go by and will no doubt follow the general lines of other royal weddings. The service will be the ordinary marriage service of the Church of England."

(Philip is a member of the Greek Orthodox Church, in full communion with the Church of England.)

Meanwhile, the Archbishop of Canterbury's most serious problem is to find someone who can write fancily enough to inscribe the royal marriage licence.

Five Explosions Of Grenade, Mortar Herald Assault

Tel Aviv Incident Starts Number of Sharp Clashes

By EDWARD CURTIS

Jerusalem, Aug. 1 (AP)—A British regimental headquarters here was attacked today with grenades and mortars and one attacker was killed, while in Tel Aviv several Jews were reported wounded by gunfire from a British armored car which created panic among a funeral procession of 5,000 Jews.

Five grenade and mortar explosions heralded an attack on headquarters of the Hampshire Regiment, only 200 yards from the Jewish agency.

Two suspected attackers were captured alive. No casualties among the Hampshires were announced.

Alarm sirens summoned troops to action stations and the area was cordoned off as police began rounding up some 200 men for questioning.

In Tel Aviv, private sources said three bursts of gunfire from an armored car manned by policemen wounded several persons in the funeral procession for five Jewish victims of reprisal shootings last night. A score of Jews were wounded in last night's shootings, which a reliable source attributed to Tommies bent on revenge for the hanging by Irgun Zvai Leumi, Jewish underground organization, of two British sergeants at Natanya. Palestine police have begun an investigation of the shootings.

As the funeral procession, led by the chief Rabbi and the city councillors, approached the great synagogue, an armored car allegedly manned by British police moved toward it, its Bren guns manned and swinging in arcs. The informants said shots came from the car as it withdrew.

The attack on the Hampshire Regiment headquarters here was made against the entrance to the perimeter of its defences. The attackers threw two mattresses over the barbed wire and tossed in a grenade in an attempt to breach the defences. One of the attackers was shot four times, and he was found lying in the street, a grenade clutched in his hand and a Sten gun magazine in his hip pocket.

A suspicious-looking package was found under one of the mattresses, and sappers investigated it as police instituted the search for the attackers.

Army and Police Deny Men Involved

Both the army and police at first denied that their men were implicated in the Tel Aviv affair.

The sergeants' funerals, with several high military and civil officials attending, were today in Ramle military cemetery. A booby trap mutilated the men's bodies as they were being removed yesterday from two eucalyptus trees north of Tel Aviv near Natanya.

The funerals of the five Jews killed in Tel Aviv, all-Jewish coastal city northwest of Jerusalem, were scheduled there at 2 p.m. Mayor Israel Rokach called for a two-hour work stoppage afterward in mourning for the five.

Firing in Tel-Aviv

The Tel Aviv informant said at least eight armored cars opened fire in the city last night. The shooting was said to have lasted several hours.

About 400 British troops attended the funeral services today for their two slain comrades. A Roman Catholic Requiem Mass was sung for Sgt. Martin, and Church of England Services were conducted for Paice.

Sherwood Foresters formed the honor guard which fired farewell volleys over the graves. Representatives of the Palestine government and the high commissioner attended and a number of Arab friends of the two sergeants were present.

(Reuters News Agency reported that a British Army headquarters statement issued today said that no British troops were in Tel Aviv last night. The police statement described the rioters as men "wearing army uniform and civilian clothes."

(Reuters said police and army units in the Tel Aviv area were ordered today to make immediate roll calls and weapons and ammunition checks. A police statement said that a check of all armored cars used by Tel Aviv police showed that none of their weapons had been fired.)

The informant said soldiers fired on two buses, killing two women, two men and a young boy and wounding other Jews, and smashed store windows all along the streets, causing property damage of $100,000. The outbreak followed reports of the clubbing and stoning of several Jews by five Britons riding in a jeep.

British troops and police patrols were pulled out of Tel Aviv late last night and the nervous citizenry, by then nearly all indoors, breathed more easily, but in Jerusalem gunfire near the Central Police Station set off a brief general alarm just before midnight.

Haganah, armed force of the critical Jewish agency, was represented by a Jewish source as fearing that the Extremist underground might attempt still more acts of reprisal for the hanging at Acre prison Tuesday of young Irgunists Meir Nakar, Absolom Habib and Yacoub Weiss.

This source said Haganah officers had ordered their self-styled Jewish National Defence army to stand by throughout Palestine.

British authorities met here yesterday to plan new measures against violence and one said some form of military control was probable unless the Jewish agency, co-operated fully in the campaign. Later a spokesman said the agency had pleaded with the government not to apply "contemplated punitive measures" —measures on which the spokesman did not elaborate.

Fear Dominates Lives of Russian Citizens of all Classes Says Munro

Galt, Aug. 1 (CP)—There is a haunting cloud of fear over Russia that is like the smell of death on a battlefield, Ross Munro recently-returned European correspondent of The Canadian Press, said in a Kiwanis Club address here today.

In opening a speaking tour of Canada, Mr. Munro said that one of the sharpest single impressions he had of Russia "is the fear neurosis among the people from the top to the bottom.

"In no other country I visited, apart from Poland, did I feel that fear so underlined the existence of a nation. In Russia a citizen is afraid to talk too much, or too little. He fears losing his job, his ration card. He fears for the welfare of his family or he fears for his life.

"And the fear is not confined to the ordinary people. It reaches into the Kremlin in the leaders' fear of aggression from outside."

Mr. Munro said the militantly defensive Russian foreign policy developed "from an incredible distrust and suspicion and monumental ignorance of what goes on outside the country; it develops from an incredible misunderstanding of western policy and western principles and the western way of life.

"The wall around the Kremlin is more than just a red-brick rampant. It is a wall of almost unbelievable ignorance of the real motives and desires and hopes of the rest of the world."

Reports of Russian representatives abroad were either completely ignored or the representatives were telling the Kremlin only what the Russian bosses wanted to read, "disregarding the truth altogether." Day after day Russian newspapers printed "nauseating nonsense" about Britain and the United States and the Russians believed it because they had no other sources of information. "The world outside is painted corrupt and evil and like a vulture poised to strike at the Soviet Union when the time is ripe."

Urges Britain Give Up Mandate In Palastine

Machester, Eng., Aug. 1 (CP)— The Manchester Guardian said in an editorial today that Foreign Secretary Bevin "should take the opportunity before parliament rises to declare, once and for all, that we mean to surrender the mandate" in Palestine—and if, as is possible, the United Nations can find no alternative, the Jews and Arabs must come to terms themselves without British troops to hold the ring."

"We have discovered in India," the Guardian asserted, "freedom and responsibility often go together."

The Guardian said that Jews and Arabs alike have been swept by events into "a tangle of hatred and futility."

The only hope now was that the U.N. might be able to find a "clear cut and final solution which would release Britain from her responsibilities and give Jews and Arabs the opportunity to start afresh.

Hail, Wind, Rain Cut 2 Mile Swath Of Damage Thru N.B. Potato Belt

Edmonton, N. B., Aug. 1—(CP) —Debris was being cleared from storm littered streets and fields today as stunned farmers surveyed a two-mile swath of desolated farmland in this rich Northern New Brunswick potato district.

Preliminary estimates placed the damage of yesterday's fierce 30-minute hail, rain, wind and electric storm at more than $100,000, but farmers said it would be days before they could correctly estimate the exact damage to their crops.

Striking yesterday afternoon, and lasting less than 30 minutes, the roaring storm left a trail of demolished barns, wrecked farm machinery, and flattened potato and coarse grain crops.

For the farmers it was a hard blow; potato-digging time was only a month away.

Sweeping across the Northern Maine border, the storm struck with intensity at nearby St. Hillaire. Five barns were blown down; seven farm houses had all their windows on the windward side blown in and damage to farm machinery alone was counted at more than $3,000.

Light and power lines were severed and were not restored until late in the night.

One person, an unidentified woman, suffered undetermined injuries when a huge tree crashed through the kitchen walls where she was huddled with 14 other persons. The others escaped unharmed.

Tall trees were lying uprooted; telephone lines were down, and crops flattened to the ground.

Old-time residents of the district could recall no such damaging storm in their memory.

Fishermen said the St. John River had risen at least three feet and predicted that it might ruin their profitable salmon business.

Here, too, crops were damaged, windows broken and highways littered with debris. But farmers reported that the majority of the farms in the area had escaped severe damage.

Thick, Juicy Steaks Get Big Hand From 'Gremlins' on Canadian Tour

By H. DENT HODGSON

Ottawa, Aug. 1 (CP)—Warmly greeted on their tour by Ca-Canada, a group of 46 British Air Cadets today enjoyed Ottawa. In Ottawa on a whirlwind tour highlighted by a visit with Prime Minister Mackenzie King, a trip up the Peace Tower of the Parliament Buildings and generous helpings of T-bone steak.

All flight lieutenants with what they have seen so far on the first leg of their trans-Canada visit, the "Gremlins," as they are fondly called by their RAF seniors, still put Canadian food at the top of the list.

"That steak would be a fortnight's ration at home," said one, who estimated he had had about five weeks' ration since his arrival in Canada Tuesday. Another lad admitted eating seven steaks yesterday.

Also on hand to welcome the boys from all sections of the British Commonwealth were Defence Minister Claxton and Mayor Stanley Lewis of Ottawa.

The chief of the air staff, Air Marshal Robert Leckie, took them under his wing from the time their three silver Dakotas touched down at Rockcliffe airport to the strains of RCAF band music. He climbed into Trotty with them, explained points of interest in the capital and saw them safely in a fatherly way.

"You are very welcome from Britain, in your own way," he cautioned, "and the eyes of Canadians will be on you. See that you carry yourselves well."

The visit from Mr. King was a surprise even to the Prime Minister. Expecting a visit to the top of the Peace Tower, the Gremlins were swarming in the Memorial Chamber when Mr. King, strolling through a corridor, the Prime Minister Buildings spotted them. With a big smile and a few words of welcome, he pointed out some of the Battle Honors of the chamber.

Defence Minister Claxton drew the cadets interest when he explained he must hurry away to a Privy Council meeting where he would give Canada's formal approval to the engagement of Princess Elizabeth and Lieut Philip Mountbatten.

Most prized possession of the cadets were small cameras, presented to them by the Air Cadet League of Canada. These were much in prominence as they inspected their first Mounted Constable Peter Mardell of Calgary, who grinned amiably as the camera clicked, piled him with questions about "Where's your horse?"

The Gremlins took off for Central Air Command headquarters at Winnipeg, Ont., after dinner at Rockcliffe, which was attended by: Air Marshal W. S. Wiggins, Campbellford.

Sixteen Lincoln bombers of the 617 Squadron, R.A.F., will land at Trenton on September 3rd for a three-day stay it has been announced by R.C.A.F. officers at Trenton. Body of Starved Hermit Found

North Bay, Aug. 1. (CP)— The body of Stanislaus Cesanikiel, 60, emaciated almost beyond recognition, was found on the rocky floor of a rude cave near the old Nipissing Junction Road, about a mile east of North Bay.

It is believed that he died about three days ago, and Dr. E. J. Brennan, coroner, said today that his death was due to starvation and neglect. The man was nearly six feet tall, and weighed only about 100 pounds at death.

The body was found by Frank Gerbasi and his son, Geno, who stumbled across the roughly constructed cave while they were picking blueberries. Built of stones and branches against an overhanging shelf of rock, and looking more like the den of an animal than a human habitation, it was almost invisible against the background of barren rocks and scrubby, wind-torn pines. Mr. Gerbasi and his son looked inside and saw the body of Cesanikiel lying on a few ground. There were two roughly constructed bunks, and a five-gallon can which served as a stove, but no trace of any food.

It is believed that Cesanikiel lived in the cave winter and summer, although a trapper who was often seen on North Bay streets, walked slowly with a six-quart basket on his arm, picking up cigaret ends and scraps.

Ill-Fitting Uniforms Irk Army Privates

Ottawa, Aug. 1. (CP)—It's sweltering here in the capital and army privates are really hot under the collar, but not because of the weather. They don't like their summer uniforms and want something done —but soon.

Their tempers boil every time they see a member of the R.C.A.F., gaily garbed in smartly-tailored new summer uniforms of tropical cloth. Meanwhile, the privates scorch under badly-cut, ill-fitting canvas clothing some of them "found me downs" from the air force.

Where has been no complaint from army authorities, but it was unofficially learned, they feel any better about it than the privates.

Why? complained an officer, "we stuck out like sore thumbs during the visit of President's Truman."

In official language "steps are under consideration," but the privates, from experience, feel that these strides will be taken too late.

Will fade away and die

Will never fade away.

What's Doing in Sport

(By The Canadian Press)

Joe Louis is to have an opponent again at Madison Square Garden Nov. 18, but the man who will face him — Jersey Joe Walcott of Camden, N. J. — will not be attacking the Champ's title. The match is billed as a non-title 10-rounder, and a title fight in New York must go 15 rounds.

A Kansas harness horse owner and his driver were suspended from race tracks for life and three other drivers drew lesser penalties from the Board of Stewards of Oregon Trotting, Inc., at Portland Thursday on charges that the best horse was not allowed to win a race at Portland Meadows last Saturday.

Suspended for life were Dr. W. R. Scott, Baxter Springs, Kan., owner of June Gray which finished fourth in the four-horse free-for-all pace, and William Hill, Topeka, Kan., driver of the horse.

Seek Permits To Export 2 Million Pounds Poultry

Ottawa, Aug. 1 — (CP)—The lifting of the export ban on live and dressed poultry shipments to the United States has brought applications for permits to export more than 2,000,000 pounds of poultry to American markets, the Agriculture Department said today.

The ban was lifted after the United Kingdom announced its decision to stop buying poultry in Canada.

The department indicated that Canadian dealers would have little trouble in disposing of their surplus poultry stocks in the United States. Department officials said that in 10 months shipments to the United Kingdom totalled 13,000,000 pounds.

In the last four days, dealers have sought permission to ship 2,000,000 pounds to the United States and applications for the shipment of additional quantities were arriving hourly.

Vaccine Makes Cotton Rats Immune to Polio

Palo Alto, Calif., Aug. 1 — (AP)— A vaccine which makes cotton rats immune to infantile paralysis was announced today by a group of Stanford University medical and chemical researchers.

This vaccine is relatively crude extract of the brains and spinal cords of mice and monkeys infected with the disease.

After a series of injections of this substance, test rats retained resistance to the disease even when given fabulous amounts of polio virus.

The virus was produced by Dr. Hubert S. Loring, Dr. C. E. Schwerdt, Nancy Lawrence and Jane Collier Anderson under a grant from the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis. They reported their work in the journal science.

Lightning Flash Blamed for Death 22 Women Prisoners

Paris, Aug. 1, (AP)— French officials today tentatively blamed a lightning flash for a fire which Wednesday night swept through a third-storey room of a women's prison here, resulting in the death of 22 of the prisoners.

Officials said lightning apparently had struck a chimney of the four-storey stone building, igniting several boxes of celluloid and acetone, used in connection with the manufacture of cheap jewelry.

The highly inflammable materials blazed up instantly, filling the workroom and choking fumes.

Authorities said the women who were trapped in the room evidently were asphyxiated, for their bodies bore only slight burns. Only one was brought out alive, and she died in hospital a short time later.

The remaining [illegible] which houses about 380 women, [illegible] occupied by soldiers.

Plenty of Food Eased Hardship At Cape Dorset

Winnipeg, Aug. 1 (CP) —Seven more persons who were aboard the Hudson's Bay Company supply ship Nascopie when she piled up on a reef near Cape Dorset, Baffin Land, July 21, shopped for new clothes in Winnipeg today after being flown here from Churchill.

They brought to 13 the number flown here and the remainder of the passengers and crew about 60, are expected Saturday afternoon by train. They arrived at Churchill yesterday aboard the Canadian icebreaker N.B. McLean which had evacuated them from Cape Dorset.

The seemed none the worse apart from unpressed clothing for their experience. Accommodation at Cape Dorset was described as good although crowded and food was plentiful because it had been possible to salvage some of the Nascopie's stores.

Were it not for that, however, their plight might have been serious because the little outpost there is not provisioned for a major increase of population.

The passengers, who were ordered ashore shortly after the ship struck, had been able to save little of their belongings.

"We had all the food we needed, sleeping accommodation, plenty of space if we wanted to walk — and nothing to do. It was a lovely life, said one of the party. Although he declined to confirm it, others said Dr. J. F. Cumming of Toronto had kept a record of their life at Cape Dorset with his movie camera.

The 2,250-ton Nascopie, on her 34th annual supply mission to the outposts, was still awash when the McLean steamed toward Churchill, the group said, but any moment might slip off into deep water.

She will be replaced this year by another ship now loading at Quebec and H.B.C. officials said supplies to have been distributed in the southern Hudson Bay area and around James Bay by the 97-ton Neophyte, which grounded off Fort Severn July 28 also will be sent the latter's ports of call by some other means.

Husband Stabbed By Irate Wife

Windsor, Aug .1. (CP)—Called to an East Windsor home by a woman shouting over the telephone: "I've killed my husband —I've killed him" police yesterday found 34-year-old Lawrence Ranger suffering from stab wounds in the chest and throat.

Taken to hospital, Ranger was reported in critical condition. The wounds were suffered in what police described as a family row.

Mrs. Emma Ranger, 38, was treated in hospital for minor hand cuts and then taken to Windsor police station where she was questioned by police and held for investigation.

Police later reported she had confessed to the attack and said the wounds were inflicted by the jagged edges of a broken beer bottle.

She was quoted as saying: "He had it coming to him—and he got it."

Hospital authorities reported Ranger suffered a severe chest laceration and two or three puncture wounds about the neck. His throat and left ear were cut and one wrist slashed.

Police said there were indications Ranger had been drinking.

When they arrived at the Rangers' apartment they found the furniture scattered about the room, much of it covered with blood, evidence that there had been a lengthy quarrel.

Charges have not yet been laid against the woman.

First indication of the trouble was a telephone call to police headquarters reporting a noisy quarrel in an upstairs apartment during the early morning. The call from Mrs. Rangers came soon after.

In hospital an operation was performed immediately upon Ranger who was reported to have lost much blood.

THE ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER
Ontario Established 1821 ... Established 1820
... ONTARIO ...

A Fiendish Deed

The civilized world is shocked at the foulness of the crime of the murder of two British sergeants by the Irgun underground organization in Palestine as a reprisal for the execution of three Irgunites who had been convicted of taking part in an escape or break in which a large number of people lost their lives. The Irgunites had seized the two soldiers as hostages.

The hanging of the three Irgunites had a bad record, but the news of horror has shocked mankind everywhere. Their victims were innocent. Such activity was in the circumstances in order for the benefit of all. These innocent men have lost their lives in a manner which forever places the Irgun underworld at enmity with right and order.

There can be no defence of their deed of savagery, in the arrest of innocent men, and in the manner in which they treated them from the start, in the manner of their cold-blooded and callous murder of the soldiers and in the fiendishness with which they linked a trap to one of the bodies of the men, with the design of killing others when they should attempt to take down the bodies of the murdered Britons. By good fortune they failed in their sinister design as none was killed though one soldier was injured and others were hurled to the ground.

The Irgun has shown that its hand is against everyone right and that its policy is contrary to the laws of God and man. No cause can win that has so brutal a foundation.

Queens of the Ocean

Two great liners, the Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth are again in the Atlantic ferry service. Both had their share in the war against the Axis and in that service contributed no small share to the United Nations' victory.

These great craft, so different from the ships of a generation ago and so much more different from the ships that crossed the Atlantic a century ago, lost their colors during the war years and went on their way without public knowledge, owing to the demands of modern warfare in which secrecy played so marked a part. These great leviathans of the deep successfully traversed the seas and became known to many thousands of servicemen. Those years and days are now past and history and the giant liners resume their peacetime task, giant palaces of comfort as they are, a good sized community moving back and forth across the Atlantic.

How far away from the routine of the ships that piled the ocean a good while ago! Life at sea in the past was something apart from ordinary life. So in a sense are the modern floating palaces because they are almost a small world in themselves, while at the same time they carry the comfort and the associations of shore along with the traditions and charm of life on the ocean wave. Modern ships are closely bound to their ports by modern inventions.

Such great ships are the impressive logical development of the ships in which the heroic Vikings, men of centuries ago, matched their courage against the unknown and the dangers of wind and wave. Between these and the Viking ships is of course a world of difference and development which no Viking could have foreseen. Those on the ships which a century ago brought the great-grandfathers and great-grandmothers of the people of today to Canada could not have had an idea of what the Queens of the Sea in 1947 would be like. It was like a voyage of Columbus to the New World four hundred and fifty-five years ago to set out for the western continent a century ago, with the trying experiences of long voyages at the hammering of the storm and wave. But the shipbuilding industry never halted and in due time came the modern luxury liners.

What will the ships be like a generation or a century hence? No one would dare say. The future, if the past is to be any guide, will see amazing developments which will more and more transform the life of man. Up to the time of the explorers of old the seas separated mankind. In due time the waves became the links across the oceans. Even designers of ships while they have all the skill and knowledge which will lead them to new designs would not be able to go very far ahead in matters of prophecy as to the character of the future ship's design.

Blue Flags

Not all have an observant eye as a writer in the New York Times whose articles on nature reveal a sympathy with nature in her ways which makes his words pleasant and inspiring to read. He shows the light of interest upon the rural life and the appeal of nature to the human mind and eye.

His latest concerns "Blue Flags" of which he writes with an understanding heart. He says:

"You will see them in the slough spots at the lower ends of meadows, moist creek bottoms they hold blooms pennants to a blue sky. Around the rims of pasture swamps where the long-stemmed cattails form a modernistic background wild blue irises open their orchid blooms to the midsummer sun. Iris versicolor was fittingly named from the Greek word meaning rainbow. The prismatic colors of the species make beauty in the lowlands.

"The blue flag is a distinctive plant among the wiry reeds and coarse grasses of its moist environment. The leaves are straight, tall and pointed, a soft lighter green shade that reminds one of the mistiness of a Corot landscape. The handsome three-parted flowers bloom from green bracts at the tips of the stocky, irregular stems.

"The technicalities of pistil, stamen and stigma arrangement are interesting to the botanist. The countryman likes to stand a moment at day's end when he goes for the cows and study the beauty of the blue flags by the brook. He is not concerned with the scientific aspects. He likes the sturdy plants and the violet-blue blossoms. He studies the yellow-gold hue at the base of the blooms and the beautiful pattern of purple veins that blend into the spreading petals. Blue flags in the low spots are summer banners that reflect the blue of the sky."

Men's Taste

A husband is a fine clothes critic. He doesn't give a hoot whether a suit has "the new sleeves" or "the new graceful silhouette." All he knows is whether what the little woman tries on is becoming or not.

Without wasting words he says "That's swell" or "It's terrible." And his judgment is almost always right. He may not know clothes, but he knows when a woman looks well in what she is wearing.

But instead of using their husbands' clothes criticism constructively — by asking their advice before they buy — most women buy their clothes first and then say, "How do you like it?"

Then their feelings are hurt if a new hat or dress doesn't get their husbands' vote of confidence and approval. — Calgary Albertan.

It is impossible to guess at the amount of aid which this country is pouring into Europe says Detroit Free Press. What is done officially is on the ledger in bold figures, of course, but there is a tremendous amount of individual effort that is nowhere recorded.

Some indication of its magnitude is indicated by British postoffice statistics. Currently, about 20,000,000 parcels a year are arriving in Great Britain by mail. Before the war the figure was approximately 1,750,000.

INFLUENCE

That the brook will find the ocean as it ripples and it flows—
Straight or winding be its channel—is the fact the schoolboy knows.
The scientists have charted earth and moon, from year to year,
And can tell unto the minute when eclipses will appear,
But there's none host that has the wisdom to predict results complete
Of the good or ill to follow when two human beings meet.

The stream of life keeps flowing on a course men cannot chart.
To what destiny it leads us there's no
knowing at the start,
And the influence of another on the life we call our own,
To the ending of the journey never fully can be known.
But, there's friendship in the making,
there is triumph or defeat,
And both may be worse, or better,
when two human beings meet.

Life is more than toil and pleasure and it's more than food and drink,
Since God fashioned man for loving and bestowed the power to think.
And so subtle is the spirit that it changes, day to day,
By the good or by the evil it encounters on the way.
And the memories of the moment may be bitter or be sweet
By the [illegible] of each other when we meet.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Why is Wisconsin called the Badger State?

Wisconsin is nicknamed the "Badger State" and its inhabitants "Badgers" because badgers formerly abounded there. Although badgers are now scarce in Wisconsin, at one time the Hudson's Bay Company bought tens of thousands of badger skins yearly from the region west of Lake Michigan. Wisconsin has been known as the "Badger State" ever since it was admitted into the union in 1848.

The American badger, like its smaller Old World cousin, is closely related to the skunk and the wolverine and is a large member of the weasel family. It has a flat, triangular-shaped small head, a sharp nose, short, thick legs, and a flattened body nearly three feet long from tip of nose to tip of tail.

The forefeet have long claws and the animal is noted for its digging ability. Its long hair falls from its sides like a mantle. Commercially the badger hair is used in making brushes for artists. The animal's coat is silver gray with black face markings and a lighter stripe running from the forehead over the back. Badgers feed on roots, fruits, insects and small mammals and young birds.

Some authorities suppose "badger" to be derived from "badge," mark, plus "ard," in reference to the white mark borne by the animal on the forehead. Others derive the term from an ancient root meaning "corn" and also from the fact that the animal was called badger because of its fondness for grain. Badger is still sometimes applied to a dealer in corn and other grains.

"To badger," meaning to tease, harass, worry, annoy or persistently importune, refers to the old English sport of badger baiting or drawing, in which a badger, tied to a fierce fighter for its size puts up a stubborn resistance regardless of the odds, was put in an "artificial hole," such as a tub or barrel, and compelled to defend itself against a pack of dogs for the amusement of onlookers. Dachshund" is German for "badger dog," and "grey" is said to have had the same original meaning, "grey" being an old name for the badger.

BLOW, CHILDREN, BLOW BUT BLOW WITH CARE

Youngster with adenoids or chronic sinusitis (inflammation of the lining of nose) not only breathes poorly thru the nose but generally is a mouth breather also. Poor kid has to get air somehow.

Mouth breathing is correct and natural in some circumstances, such as when swimming and when running a race or putting forth the utmost effort in a contest or competitive game of any kind. It is the right way to breathe when a child or an adult has acute coryza or any temporary congestion and stuffiness of the nasal passages that makes breathing thru the nose difficult.

Habitual mouth breathing from any cause is wrong and is not properly treated by physician if he fails to remove the obstruction of jaws, teeth, sinuses, nasal passages, throat or tonsils. Such victims more susceptible to diseases of these structures and to various systems and organs in general weaknesses and diseases.

This is a health conscious and our primary concern here is prevention — not cure. Hence, prevention of unnecessary major operations — not operations. Hence too much such operations are performed on children with tonsils, adenoids, nasal enlargement or prominence of tonsils that is healthy youngsters has in the late winter and early spring.

A youngster with enlarged tonsils, adenoids, acute coryza, chronic rhinitis ("catarrh") or any other condition that keeps the nasal passages congested, stuffy, difficult to breathe thru, should be taught how to blow, or rather how not to blow the nose.

Mouth breathing is correct and natural in some circumstances, but is wrong and harmful in other circumstances. One of the latter is when you blow the nose. Don't blow hard and forcibly. Don't blow with both nostrils pinched between thumb and finger as many do. Don't blow material into the eustachian tube leading to ear cavity and cause inflammation there, or into one or another sinus and cause sinus trouble.

English physicians years ago found that children with stuffed up nasal passages, tonsils, adenoids, etc., found relief in the early morning nose clearing drill by snuffing a pinch of dry powdered soap, plain toilet soap, and a snuff user should snuff, and sneezing and gently blowing the nose over handkerchief held under the nose but not touching it.

It is bad hygiene to suppress a sneeze and bad hygiene to suppress or muffle the sound of sneezing. It is good hygiene to put enthusiasm into it and sneeze heartily when you do sneeze. Do not cover the nose tightly when about to sneeze, but hold handkerchief just under the nose but not touching it, as for blowing the nose. It is not only impolite but dangerous to persons near you to sneeze openly — if you have in mind to handkerchief then sneeze into your hand — keep your germs to yourself and don't distribute samples to everybody within range.

Answer — the stickful is another funny. Then dated Boston May 22, telling of a forward instructor's advice that people should close bedroom windows at night. In Boston, that is. Maybe the night air is more dangerous there. Then again, when there's no news Aunt Polly has to make some, doesn't she?

Clergyman Faces Bigamy Charge

Salisbury, Eng., Aug. 1. (AP) — The Rev. Arthur Lamb, 39, retired land clergyman was arraigned Thursday on a charge of bigamously marrying an attractive ex-servicewoman in what he described as "a period of my life that I cannot account for" as a result of nervous strain of war experiences.

He was Rev. Charles H. C. Lamb, an R.A.F. chaplain at Malta during the heavy bombing. The woman was Joan Boddie, 28, former corporal in the Women's Auxiliary Air Force.

Mrs. Lamb, whom the clergyman married in 1941, was with him in the courtroom when he pleaded innocent, was committed for trial by jury on bail of $250 bail. She told reporters she was confident Lamb would tell the truth and said she would stand by him.

Also in the court room was Miss Boddie, who said she did not know Lamb was married before her baby was born that March and added: She said they went through a form of marriage in 1944, after the war in Holland, but in England.

Lamb was quoted by the prosecution as saying Miss Boddie "came into my life" while he was preaching a funeral at a station to which she was attached.

"She was pure and good as an angel, and she seemed to realize my secret that I had tried so hard to conceal from others of that I was ashamed of going insane," a statement attributed to Lamb.

Lamb said he learned of the second marriage ceremony when his bishop revoked his clergyman's licence and ordered him to vacate the rectory of St. John's chapel, Isle of Man, several weeks ago after hearing from Miss Boddie.

"I have absolutely no recollection of the events of going through a marriage ceremony," he said, "but after meeting Miss Boddie and the clergyman who performed the ceremony I accept on the evidence, that I married the man."

Miss Biddie said she and Lamb lived together at a number of places in England, Scotland and Northern Ireland before he returned to the Isle of Man and his wife.

OLD GRAIN PORT TO SEE BUSTLE OF OTHER DAYS

2nd Thurlow

By TIM DICKSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Whitby, Ont. (CP) — This Ontario County town, used as a harbor for grain packets nearly a century ago, is planning a comeback as a port.

Its harbor mouth is silted up and the docks are awash due to this year's high water level in Lake Ontario but townsfolk say $250,000 has been set aside for harbor reclamation to provide better facilities for industries which have expressed desire to locate here.

When the work is finished, probably next year, shipping activities will bring new stir and bustle to this attractive community of 5,000 which is typical of Old Ontario towns.

On a hot summer day the breeze from Lake Ontario ripples the thick foliage of maple and elm trees that line the streets and the willow trees along its creekbanks. Whitby citizens claim their town has more trees over which tree branches form a perfect arch than any other community in the province.

Every home has its broad green lawn, its flower beds and its luxuriant garden. Houses are neat and trim. A few mansions, reminiscent of the days when Whitby was the county grain port, dot the orderly streets.

Whitby's industries include a harness fitting and saddlery hardware factory, a tannery, a horse blanket factory, a big vegetable canning plant, a factory that laces and straps concern, a planing mill, lumber companies, two box manufactories, a knitting mill and a work clothing plant.

Rich Farming Area

In the lush farming section which surrounds the town are two of the largest apple orchards in southern Ontario, several big thoroughbred livestock farms and two racing stock farms, two all-year fox farms a federally-bonded quarantine farm for stock newly-arrived from other countries and acres upon acres of produce destined for the canning plant. On the edge of town a missionary's son raises and sells capuchin and marmoset monkeys and exotic birds.

Just south of the town stands a big Ontario mental hospital. It has its own farms andgardens in which the patients who are well enough to work under supervision can find light labor to help ease their troubled minds.

Gardens and farmlands on the property of the Ontario Ladies' College on southeastern Whitby help supply food for the girls who come from many parts of the world to attend the boarding school. Even while the school is closed for the summer vacation, organizations use its buildings for conventions.

But times have changed in Whitby. Until 30 years ago, long lines of farmers' wheat wagons moved from the northern limits to the dock every Saturday afternoon. Now tourist cars from virtually every state of the American union and every Canadian province roll in a steady stream from east to west on the busiest through highway in southern Ontario.

Holiday on Northern Hastings Lake Enjoyed

Hastings County possesses many beautiful small lakes surrounded by attractive scenery. These lakes afford opportunity for tourists and holiday seekers to engage in fishing, swimming, and boating. As Hastings County is about twice the size of the Province of Prince Edward Island and about three times the size of the State of Rhode Island, that county provided accommodation for a million tourists and pleasure seekers for the summer, fall and winter.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Mikel of this city, have just returned from a rest at a tourist resort on one of these Hastings County lakes. The cabins were well-constructed, provided with inside lavatories having running water, fine places in which blazing embers added warmth on a chilly or rainy night, and also electric lights. Also a large building used as a dining hall and recreation centre—all reasonable cost. The guests cooperated in various forms of enjoyment and Mr. Mikel was elected mayor pro tem. The Rev. Mr. Dr. Ferguson, Bishop of Ontario, accompanied by Mrs Lyons, had charge of the "little old cathedral in the pines". Mr.

and Mrs. Fred H. Deacon of Belleville were among the guests present.

Guests were present from various parts of Canada and the U.S.A. The fishing was "all the law allows". The swimming in the beautiful water of the lake was delightful, and the tramps over the hills of Hastings and through the woods enhanced the deliciousness of the generously served food. The joys of nature rendered unnecessary the use of the radio.—(Contributed.)

"We made the SMART choice!" say OLDSMOBILE owners everywhere

WRITES R. A. BALMER,
General Manager of a large Toronto furniture company: "After driving my new Oldsmobile 8 in winter weather and over roads unusually rough, I find you were very conservative in your recommendations for the "Hydra-Matic Drive is certainly the smoothest thing in mechanism that I have ever experienced. I am really proud of this car, and for driving comfort, ease of handling, and general roadworthiness, I can only say I'm glad I bought an Oldsmobile. I made the smart choice."

And that's just an excerpt from one of the many letters sent in by Oldsmobile owners—letters that repeat again and again, "There's nothing else like it in driving! It's smart looking . . . smart handling . . . and the new "GM Hydra-Matic Drive is the smartest way of driving yet devised."

Yes . . . people who choose Oldsmobile make the smart choice . . . for Oldsmobile is the smart buy of the year. To you who are waiting for your new Oldsmobile—our thanks for your patience . . . our tribute to your wisdom . . . the demand for Oldsmobile with the new "GM Hydra-Matic Drive is so widespread that it still greatly exceeds the supply. Make sure your present car carries you conveniently and safely through the waiting period . . . by having it serviced regularly by your Oldsmobile dealer.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Milkteer

Most bridge players need to have a lot of silly ideas knocked out of their heads. The space is better occupied with the few rules that will make good players of them.

Each player is entitled to an average of one fourth of what a card pack contains. Bidding words tell what they have above average.

An opening one bid shows, among other things, five tricks. His partner is assumed to have two. Each raise by either shows another trick. Responder bids only with more than two tricks. When responder bids something, he follows the order of choice in T-A-N. This means takeout (to a biddable suit) first; assist (with adequate support) next; bid no-trump as a last resort.

This tells you the type of bid to make with any hand in the pack. Remember there are only three types: takeouts, assists, no-trumps. And choose the honest one that comes first in the list of T-A-N.

Operate this knowledge on the hand shown here:

♥ 5 6 4
♦ K 8 5 3
♣ Q 7 2

Suppose partner starts with a bid of one heart. You have more than two tricks. So, bid something. Look for a takeout to a biddable suit. Having no biddable suit, you are unable to fit.

So, you next look for an assist. Lacking adequate support for a suit bid only once, you are unable to A. What then do you have you? Nothing but a no-trump bid to consider. So, you bid one no-trump.

Now, look. You are a person of reasonable intelligence. Stop to consider what you have told your partner. Having made a bid of any kind, have you not said you have more than two tricks?

The order of choice is T-A-N. Having bid no-trump, have you not denied having 2, or A? So you have said you do not have a biddable suit (4 spades or diamonds or clubs. Or adequate heart support.

This should be clearer than mud.

Subway World Series Looms As Dodgers, Yankees Head For Stretch in Flag Races

Brooks Win 13th Straight Victory — Hold 10-Game Lead Over Cards, Giants; Yanks Hold 12-Game Margin Over Second-Place Sox

By JACK HAND
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

A subway world series, rounded on two dazzling western trips by Brooklyn Dodgers and New York Yankees, appears certain as the clubs head into August, normally the headiest the stretch in the baseball pennant races.

Thirteen straight victories by the under-rated Brooks have given manager Burt Shotton's men a commanding 10-game lead over New York Giants and the defending St. Louis Cardinals.

Although the Yankees slacked off a trifle from the pace they held during their 19-game win string, they have opened up a 12-game margin on the defending Boston Red Sox. Chief interest in the American League now centers around the scrap for second place, in sweeping three straight from St. Louis at Sportsman's Park, the third by a 3-1 margin yesterday, the Dodgers left the champ hanging on the ropes.

St. Louis has 59 games to play as compared to 55 for the Dodgers but their overwhelming advantage in home games now has largely disappeared and they must fight it out on even ground against that staggering 10-game deficit.

Even Howie Pollet, the ace Dodger-tamer, failed manager Eddie Dyer although he pitched a smart ball game, normally good enough to win. They were tied at 1-1 going to the ninth when Pee Wee Reese tripled to score Bruce Edwards with the winning run.

New York Giants also helped the Dodgers build up their lead by bowling to Cincinnati 8-7. The defeat left the Giants 10 full games behind the Flock. Brooks, Grady Hatton's three-run homer in the eighth turned the tide after earlier clouts by Johnny Mize and Walker Cooper, each with two on had given the Giants the edge. It was No. 31 for Mize and No. 24 for Cooper.

Dutch Leonard posted his 12th victory over Bert Haas of Philadelphia, a 3-0 five-hit shutout over the Cubs.

Rain washed out the Boston at Pittsburgh game and "threatening weather" postponed the Detroit at New York game although the sun shone most of the afternoon on the Yankee Stadium.

Cleveland swept its three-game set from Boston Red Sox 5-4, on homers by manager Lou Boudreau and Joe Gordon.

Bob Savage gained a last-inning spot by Chicago to save Philadelphia Bill Veeck's his fourth victory over Ed Lopat 3-2.

Mickey Haefner continued his efficient relieving, scattering five St. Louis hits for a 4-1 Washington triumph. During the last 21 innings he has allowed only two runs and 13 hits.

Canadians Pay High Prices For Thoroughbred

Lexington, Ky., Aug. 1 (AP)—The boys who scan the money figures of yearling thoroughbreds today looked at their tabs on the 1947 Keeneland sales, which closed last night, and found a sharp price dip.

Their calculations showed the average Mr. Classy Colt or Miss Frisky Filly of 1947 brought $6,826—away down from the record $9,920 established in 1946.

The boys had to go back to 1944 to find a lower average figure, $5,321.

The final tally on this year's four days of sales at picturesque Keeneland, the blue grass horse country's non-profit track, showed a total of 436 yearlings sold for $2,976,000 for the $6,826 average.

But the closing session of 1947's auctions conducted by Breeders' Sales Company were not without some big bids. A son of Bull Dog brought $45,000, highest of the season.

Jaclyn Stable, operated by Jay Paley and Leon Levy, California radio executives, bought the dark bay colt out of Spotted Beauty.

Leading Canadian buyers at the sale were E. P. Taylor of Toronto, who shelled out close to $60,000 for three colts and three fillies, and R. S. McLaughlin of Oshawa, Ont., who paid $4,000 for a yearling son of Alsab.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE H. CARVER, Sports Editor.

A click of a switch, a moment's hush and a sheer white brilliance suddenly flooded the baseball diamond at the Exhibition Grounds last night as fifteen floodlights blazed forth, added their voiceroous approval to the official inauguration of the new diamond and the inauguration of the floodlight system.

There were simple yet colorful, ceremonies. In the white glare of the lights the Trenton Bellerville Municipal Band played the "American National Anthem and Canada" while two professional baseball teams and the huge crowd stood rigidly at attention. Topping the evening off was a flurry exhibition of baseball between the Waterlown Athletics and Auburn Cayugas that easily evidenced the difference between the professional brand of the pastime and the kind that is played around these here parts.

There was an edible gasp from the overflowing grandstand and bleachers as the brilliancy of the lights first made the playing field. Many of the cash customers had never seen a ball game played under the lights. And to the credit of the Parks Board, it must be stated that the managers of the visiting teams and many of the players themselves placed their stamp of approval on the new lighting system.

"It is almost perfect," Manager Bob Shawkey of the Waterlown squad said after the game. "Your lights here are among the best in the Border League circuit and we have played under systems that are a lot worse."

Last night's show was the culmination of months of effort and headaches on the part of Chairman of the Parks Board Leo Collins, secretary Orland Pinkston and other colleagues. From the time the idea of installing floodlights was conceived unforseen obstacles presented themselves, which naturally delayed the proposed date of activation. Many difficulties arose that created barriers in the path of progress but the board grimly stuck to its guns — and last night was the answer.

Belleville and its residents as well as those of the surrounding district should be proud of his new innovation for night sport and other phases of public entertainment. The towering poles which take batteries of powerful lights, have finally reached a stage of perfection that will satisfy not only their severest critics, but which fill a long-felt want in this city.

In the early stages of the renovation of the baseball diamond, and lights installation, it was the unanimous decision of the board to "start from the bottom up." And literally speaking, this was done. It was felt that mere surface treatment would not suffice. Drainage had to be considered. Topsoil to a depth of thirteen inches was completely removed from the infield and six-inch layers of crushed gravel, cinders and earth deposited in the spreadout "tractors."

Unexpected difficulties were encountered in the installation of the eighty-foot poles which base the powerful light batteries. Eighteen inches below the surface solid rock was apparent. Blasting was the only answer to this problem. This was done, but at considerable added expense. Gaping craters marked the spots where the poles were to be placed.

The infield, to use baseball parlance is of the "skinned" type. It is expected that in the near future it will be sodded along the style of major league baseball stadiums. The outfield is somewhat rough, but more work has been earmarked for the outer gardens. Last night a ponderous roller ambled its way up and down the outfield in an effort to ravillipate the movements and play of the outfielders.

New bases were purchased. The playing field was enclosed with snow fence. A large wire screen was erected in the centre front of the grandstand, as a tireless Parks Board went out to make the inauguration of the diamond and lighting system a success. Fifteen hundred people will testify to the results that the Board feels that more can be done. If last night's after-game comment on the part of John Public can be judged a criterion, then floodlight sport is here to stay. Many came to criticize but went home satisfied with what they saw and experienced.

So this columns orchids go to the unsung and often maligned Parks Board of this city, whose efforts over the years in trying to give Belleville sport fans the latest in Hydodlight innovations, were crowned with success last night. More power to 'em.

Tonight in Toronto, the Trenton Flyers face the cream of baseball test when they meet the classy Peterborough Marines in the first round of the National Baseball Congress Tournament at Maple Leaf Gardens. The winners will likely face one of the five Toronto teams entered in this phase of the tourney, and if successful in copping the duke in the series, will go on to Western Ontario for the Congress finals.

In any event, the two squads will clash again here on Monday (Civic Holiday) night in an exhibition tilt in aid of the Kinsmen Club's Community Swimming pool. The admission is 50c a bite, and the teams will ice off sharp at eight of the clock, to play twilight and floodlight baseball. The game should be one of the diamond classics of the year, no matter which team wins in Toronto tonight.

Fans of the Watertown-Auburn game last night saw two of the smoothest fielding teams to show their wares here in months. The game developing into a hurling duel between Stan Navagr, of Auburn and Tom McEvoy of the Watertown squad. McEvoy allowed three hits but lost the game while Navagr was touched for six safeties. Wildness on the part of McEvoy in the first innings when he walked three opposing batsmen forcing in one of the two runs scored in the innings, was the answer to the question of why his defeat.

But he settled down and from that time on it was a parade of enemy batsmen to and from the plate, or infield. He allowed only two hits over the remaining eight innings route both coming in the fourth when Auburn scored their third and final run.

Navagr was steady all through and scattered the six clouts garnered off his delivery. Two were bunched in the fourth when Christopher doubled and Gerken singled for the lone Watertown tally. Indicative of the fine defensive work staged by both squads is the fact that only one struck out two batters while McEvoy whiffed three.

Freddie Gerken, Watertown first baseman thrilled the crowd with his work afield. On two occasions he raced to the fence behind the first base foul line and made almost impossible catches of high foul flies. Steve Nemeth third baseman of the Cayugas easily lived up to his reputation of being the starriest performer in the Border League.

Further evidence of the fine defensive work on both squads was seen in the fact only dozen sparkling double-plays. But the best of 'em make mistakes and both teams committed a couple of miscues. But all was forgiven in the greatness of fine fielding done by the squads.

Canadian National Railway Veterans and Sedorets Point Anne Leafs enter the playoffs next week to decide the right to represent this city in the Intermediate 'A' softball playdowns. It was decided at a meeting last night to hold a seven-game home and home series with the first tilt scheduled for Monday night at the "Point." Second game will be played here on Wednesday and the teams go at it again on Friday in Sedore's village. Veterans are favored on more or less easy marks for the Leafs' during the season are rapidly rounding into shape. The series will be a close one and will go the limit of seven games. Later the teams will play off for the city softball title.

Fifteen Hundred Fans See Crack Pro Baseball Teams At Floodlights Inaugural

Colorful Ceremonies and Diamond Artistry of Watertown, Auburn Teams, Mark Official Opening of New Playing Field

Joyful ceremonies topped by a diamond artistry of two professional baseball teams marked the inauguration of the new baseball diamond and floodlight system at the Exhibition Grounds last night.

Upwards of fifteen hundred spectators of all ages crowded the grandstand and bleachers overflowing long before the scheduled time for the game between the Watertown Athletics and the Auburn Cayugas of the Border Professional Baseball League.

There was a cool tang in the air, reminiscent of late September, but the crack Belleville Municipal Band under the direction of S. Reg. Hinchey kept the crowd in festive mood with a melodic concert that started at eight o'clock, an hour before game time.

Sharp at nine o'clock the band marched to the infield, the Union Jack and "Old Glory" fluttered from the flagstaff, Players of both squads lined up in front of the grandstand as the band played the United States National Anthem and "O Canada."

Chairman Cleo Codling of the City Parks Board in brief address of welcome formally declared the new park opened.

White light flooded the field as the switches clicked. Cheers rolled out from the packed stands as the nocturnal sunshine turned twilight into the brilliancy of a July afternoon. The Auburn team trotted to their positions in the field.

At the plate in a brief ceremony, Mayor Frank Fallwell essayed a batting role with Chairman Codling pitching and Alderman Angus Duffy behind the bat. The versatile chief magistrate finally "got hold of one" and smashed it to the outfield while the crowd roared its approval.

Alderman Duffy, president of the Canadian Legion Branch here extended the appreciation of his organization to the large crowd for its interest and attendance. He also paid tribute to the energy of the Parks Board in their efforts to make the new diamond and lights a success.

Outstanding Game.

Climaxing the evening's program was the outstanding exhibition of the Watertown and Auburn baseball teams. Well up in the first division of the Border League the squads gave one of the finest displays of professional baseball seen here in some time. They gave ample evidence of the game as it is played by professionals and a number of sensational fielding plays drew the plaudits of the neutral crowd.

But for the first inning's wildness, McVoy, Watertown hurler, the game might have resulted in a tie. McVoy walked three men in the initial inning, forcing in one run himself while the lone hit of the session off Bob Harmon's bat accounted for the second run. The final score was Auburn 3, Watertown 1.

McVoy settled down after the first innings and had the Cayugas well under control. He allowed but two hits and one run over the remainder of the game and was never in serious trouble.

Stan Savage, Auburn hurler, was picked for eight hits, two of them clustered in the fourth when Watertown scored their lone run. When Fred Gerken, sensational first-sacker of the team, drove in Christopher who had doubled earlier.

Outstanding fielding marked the game with both teams turning in sparkling efforts. Indicative of the fielding prowess of the squads is the fact that McVoy struck out three batters while Navage whiffed five.

Six double-plays, four of them by Watertown, cut off potential rallies. Gerken, Watertown first baseman, had the crowd on its feet with two sensational catches of foul flies. Gerken raced to the fence to the right of the plate and pulled the ball down while leaning half-way over the structure.

Two hits and a walk in the fourth paved the way for the third Auburn run. Nadel filed out and Harmon smashed out his second hit of the game beyond second base. He advanced with the walk to Denovski and reced home on Allen's hit to left field.

Mike Christopher, Watertown shortstop was the batting hero of the game with a double and two singles for four. Jack Thackston, catcher came through with a brace of hits with Gerken contributing the retaining clout of the six garnered off Navage's delivery.

Bob Harmon, Auburn, shortstop got two of his teams three safeties with Jack Allen, catcher donating the third.

Floodlight baseball struck a popular note if after-game comment on the part of the fans can be judged a criterion every play could be seen with distinct clarity and the progress of the ball even when hit far out to the outfield gardens could be followed all the way. Visiting players and officials were high in their praise of the efficiency of the system, one going as far as to state that it was one of the best in the Border League circuit.

LEAFS DEFEAT CHIEFS IN EXTRA INNING THRILLER

Chapman Singles in 13th With Bases Loaded to Score 2-0 Victory For Chief Hurler, Sees Eight-Game String Broken

(By The Associated Press)

This is a rough week for pitchers owned by Cincinnati Reds in their farm club. Ewell Blackwell of the parent major league club saw his 15-game streak snapped by New York Giants on Wednesday while Saturday Howie Fox, the Clancy farmhand for Syracuse, had his eight-game victory string broken by Havana in a 13-inning thriller.

Fred Chapman's bad-hop single with the bases loaded broke up a brilliant battle to give Toronto a 2-0 edge. The Giants clicked for five double plays behind Fox who went all the way in search of his ninth straight victory. John Thompson, who allowed but one hit in the last five innings after replacing Luke (Hot Potato) Hamlin, received credit for the triumph. Hamlin was forced to leave when hit on the foot by a pitched ball thrown by Fox.

In the 13th, Frankie Drews' error gave Toronto a lift. Then a scratch hit and a walk loaded the bases for Chapman's blooper which bounced over Al Rubeling's glove.

Both front-running Montreal and second-place Jersey City gained on the Chiefs in what once again has turned into a pennant race.

Montreal protected its six-game edge on the Little Giants by hanging out a 10-4 edge over Newark, their 10th in a row over the Bears. Jack Banta struck out 15 boosting his seasons total to 139 in 138 innings in recording his 15 victory.

Rack Mack, with two homers, knocked in three runs off Banta who weakened momentarily in the eighth inning.

Jack Graham set an all-time Jersey City home run record when he collected his 27th off Glen Gardner to down Rochester 4-2. The old mark was set by Bobby Thomson, now with the parent New York Giants. Jack Wade pitched the entire game, a five hitter, to hand Gardner his 11th loss.

Baltimore split a pair with Buffalo the Orioles grabbing the opener 6-5 but the Bisons came in matters in the finale, 9-1. The Baltimore Club made only four hits in the first till but three Buffalo pitchers Ted Gray, Saul Rogovin and Hank Perry walked ten men.

Pete Appleton checked the Birds while his Buffalo mates blasted George Hooks and Mike Gast for 18 hits, four by Butch Meyer including a home run.

Stage Set For Katan-Kenneth Mat Calisthenics

Tonight's the night in the Memorial Arena ring when Lou Katan and Ken Kenneth the New Zealand wrestling champion meet to decide a logical opponent for Whipper Billy Watson and the British Empire title. The men meet after two weeks of postponement owing to various causes. Katan's arm has healed completely as shown by his rough-house win over Big Ben Sharpe here in last Friday's main bout. Kenneth is in his usual fine condition and as every one knows who has seen him in action, he is sure to carry the fight to Katan from the opening bell.

Tonight's bout is a match between experience and great strength on the one hand, and speed and a bull-terrier energy on the other. The fair-haired New Zealander is one non-stop athlete who believes in action all the way. A clean-cut scientific wrestler, Kenneth believes that superior leverage backed by strength and speed can beat any of the rough stuff. He'll have plenty of opportunity of proving his theory when Honest John Katan starts on him.

Irish Tom Collins and his equally Irish opponent Dan O'Connor make in the opening match, while Pat Flanagan will try his spectacular aerial stuff against Strangler Bob Wagner in the semi-final. Flanagan hopes to make it another night for the

Just Another Jo For Joe Louis

New York, July 31 (AP) — Heavyweight champion Joe Louis will meet Jersey Joe Wolcott of Camden, N. J., in ten-round non-title fight at Madison Square Garden Nov. 14, the twentieth Century Sporting Club announced today.

The bout will be one of two so-called non-title affairs planned for the champion this year after his Lansagne and the Twentieth Century organization which holds his contract, agreed that no suitable challengers for the champion were available.

Wolcott pounded his way into the ranks of leading contenders earlier this year by outpointing both Joey Maxim of Cleveland and Elmer (Violent) Ray of Hastings, Fla., both of whom had beaten him in previous fights.

The Dreadful Night

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER 14

Christy was silent, and after awhile Norman said, "he has been shocked, you know. It's not just nerves — just imagination. It's well, I don't know. He's always been flippant n gdayaMFWYP been flippant and gay and casual, and he went into the army that way. There wasn't anything gay or casual about that, he was trapped — it was deadly serious and dangerous, and it was too much for him. It scared him. He never saw any real fighting. He got injured playing polo, and I imagine he was glad.

Lin seems ophisticated enough, but he isn't. He has no reserves. This thing has shattered him. Ten minutes after you left he was telephoning for reservations — he's simply getting out."

"Getting out of what, do you suppose, Norman?"

"Of what may be a mess," Norman said after a moment.

Her heart sank lower and lower.

"If she dies, you mean?" she aid thickly, reluctantly.

"She'll die."

"You think o?"

"Yep. We telephoned the hospital, you know. They never tell you anything. But the nurse said 'She is very low of course.' Just admitting that gives you a pretty good idea."

"They'll hold Milo for murder, Norman."

"They're holding him now, on a battery charge, or something like that. Yep, it'll be murder."

"They couldn't involve Lin, if he did stay."

"Witness." Christy shuddered at the brief reply as Norman turned the car in at the gate at Widney's. It was desolating to have Lin desert her. He could escape; she was trapped.

"Can't they hold Lin?" Get him back?"

"Not if he's on the ocean. "TheySHRDLUSHRD ULUTH They'll probably get a confession from Milo on what she says and what you say. They'll not need him."

Christy felt a sudden anger at Lin stir in her heart, but Lin, when she saw him, appeared quite unconscious of any change of feeling on her part, and was absorbed only in the necessity of getting away. He was expertly packing, coming in the sitting room busily he made scant reference to the tragedy of the night, and appeared to have los all interest in it.

"Norman would have known that the storm was coming, he would have turned 'round and brought us all back," she said. She spoke of the wreckage the blizzard had caused in the mountains; of the frantic telephone messages that had come in to the rescue crews. "It was just hard luck; it winds up our visit on such a bad note," lamented Fairleigh, gently. But always with an unflurried, unanxious air that reminded Christy afresh of her own miserable involvement and isolation.

"The facts remain," growled Norman, coming out to brood over a cup of tea. "Christy and Lin were waiting for us. These poor Milo dopes got into a fight— we couldn't make it because of the storm— it was just rotten luck ...round."

"...n't look that way to ...," Christy said. "...usband so jealous ... was Fairleigh's

But there's his mother— and everyone—" There was a silence, then Christy said, "You said "winds up your visit,' Fairleigh. Does that mean that you're going away, too— you and Norman?"

"I suppose any time now," Fairleigh said lightly. Christy was silent.

It was into this stillness that a new note struck suddenly; a car stopped in the snowy drive with a grinding of brakes, and quick feet rapped on the steps and crossed the porch. The four watchers by the fire all turned to look apprehensively toward the door, and Norman muttered, "it's the sheriff. I guess she's dead."

But it was not the sheriff who entered; it was a square-built man in a naval uniform, who burst into the room impetuously calling out "Chris: Where are you?"

Monty reached instinctively to find the light switch at the entrance and flooded the room with soft light, and Christy got to her feet and stood staring at him bewilderedly.

"Monty!" she whispered.

He had her in his arms, cupping her chin with his hand push ing her face back for a look before he smothered it in kisses.

"Oh, girl — girl — girl" he said, "how I've hungered for this! Oh, Christy — my girl — say you're glad to see me!"

The years she had lived without him, those years in which her wifehood had come to seem only a dream, were gone; Christy was jolted awake, everything came real again. She clung to him, and when last he turned, and turned her with him, to face the three beside the fire, there were tears on her cheeks and on Monty's.

"How do you do, Mrs. Fortesque!" he said, in a strong joyous voice. "I know you, of course, from what Christy's written me. You're Mr. Devereaux—of course and Mr. Fortesque."

"I flew back Thursday, got off from La Guardia Field at midnight yesterday. I took a bus down to the junction and finished the trip on Miller's grocery truck. Hello, darling, I'm back!"

"Feels good," Norman said with a sympathetic smile.

"Good!" They were all studying him, and Christy new that he knew it. But that would never phase Monty. He was eager, happy; he had had a hard and dangerous job, and it was well done, and the way to the old happiness security, was clear.

"I saw mother," he said, "looks well, too, Chris. And that baby of ours! She came right to me, jumped into my arms. 'Anna," she says, "I'll stay with my Daddy, now.' How do you make that out,' she doesn't remember me She couldn't."

"You're picture, Monty." If the others were staring at him, Monty equally had attention for nobody except his wife. He kept his arm about her; now and then his eyes said to the circle, "Isn't she lovely?" Between her distress the confusion of her thoughts, and the almost shocking awakening and return to the old dear feeling of loving and being loved Christy was completely distracted, her only safety was to hold Monty's hand and say as little as she possibly could. But with her luctuating color and shadowed eyes Fairleigh, too, thought that she had never seen even Christy look more beautiful.

Obviously Monty did not think th company important, and so, in a strangely perplexing manner they began to seem unimportant to Christy too. He had come to take her away from them, she ...idn't belong here, and neither ... There were a thousand ... to be said between husband and wife with which these ...ers had nothing ... Dev-ereaux — of course they were outsiders. Of course the absorbing interest in her life was this vital, strong, cheerful man, who had come back from the great war ready to start so radiantly into the business of loving and living again. She had always loved him loved him in the dreamy days of their courtship, loved him as a young and inexperienced wife, stumbling through haphazard, gay mistakes in meals and plans all through the first year, loved him — depended upon him so completely!— when first sobering shadow of war fell upon them, when first the even more sobering certainty of motherhood again.

Now here he was back and he and she could begin to live again —and the most terrible shadow of all was between them, turning this day, that should have been the happiest of her life, into the grimest and most terrible.

"Well I'm taking this wife of mine home, we've got some talking to catch up," Monty said, easily and as a matter-of-course. Christy looked at him with jealousy, honest and open-eyed Monty, with life straight and simple for him, and the rest of them so sick with their secrets and their fears!

Somehow she said goodbyes and went out with him to the car, all in a dream — in a very nightmare of terror. Norman and Lin came down with them, stood in the deepening blue showy dusk and the long shadows of the eastern mountains. Lin seized a chance to speak to Christy in an aside.

"Can he telephone you tonight —Norman, I mean? About Mrs. Milo?"

"Norman?"

"I'll be gone."

"Oh, yes — I'd forgotten."

Again a sort of gray desolation fell upon her, in the gray dusk. She must face this alone.

"They said, 'dying,' didn't they Lin?"

"At the hospital. Yes. Goodbye Christy." He wrung her unresponsive hand, grasped Monty's.

"Goodbye," she said lifelessly. Then she was in the front seat of the car, her shoulder against Monty's, in the old way.

"Darling, isn't this heaven?" Monty said, taking the turn to Indian Bridge. "Isn't it heaven, to have it over and to begin to live, and raise our little girl, and make our plans again. You don't know how men over there in all that mess have been hungering just for that— the right to live.

"And what I've come back to!" he went on, with a swift oblique glance that she caught in the half-light. "Everything I've not written you anything— it was all indefinite anyway, but I think we've had the most stupendous streak of luck, sweetheart, that anyone ever had. Remember my writing about Murchison?"

"Your assistant, yes," Christy swallowed the salt water that had suddenly filled her mouth, saw the town dip and reel in a nauseous wave of headache. There was and extra out; the boys were calling it. "Gita Milo dies in hospital. Murder charge."

"See that?" Monty asked Gurney Hill had to get up a tragedy to welcome me home. What do you know about a feller like that suddenly going berserk? But Lord, half the world is, now, — No, but listen. Murchison's father is president of the National Interhemisphere Power."

"Big?" she said faintly, swallowing.

"Big! You said it! Well, the old man came to meet Pinky— that's the boy. We had dinner together, with his general manager, Sloat. They want me to go to Brazil, Christy, at twelve thousand for a start."

Strongest Action Ever Taken by U.N. Compliance Seen

Council Orders Disputes Settled by Peaceful Means

By LARRY HAUCK

Lake Success ..... (AP)—The United Nations today moved swiftly to stop the conflict in Indonesia with unprecedented orders to The Netherlands and Indonesian government to cease hostilities immediately.

Terse notes were dispatched to the two governments within a few hours after last night's far-reaching Security Council decision calling upon them to stop fighting and settle their disputes by arbitration or other peaceful means.

The council debated only two days before issuing the cease-fire order in the strongest action ever taken by a U.N. organ. Hostilities began July 20.

To enforce its decision, the council under the U.N. charter can pull out the most potent weapons in its arsenal—economic sanctions and severance of diplomatic relations by all 55 members, and, as a last resort, "such action by air, land and sea forces as may be necessary to maintain or restore international peace and security."

Vote 8 to 0

The vote was 8 to 0 with British, France and Belgium abstaining.

Russia and the United States, the latter one of the authors of the resolution, split only when delegates voted down a Soviet demand that the Indonesian nationalist troops be withdrawn to positions they held as they were before the operations. The Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, insisted that otherwise the Dutch would have an advantage in the negotiations.

Both parties were expected to comply with the council's decision although Dutch Ambassador Eelco N. van Kleffens abstained on the council's vote. Dutch Ambassador Eelco N. Van Kleffens stalked out after the session with a "no comment whatsoever" statement to reporters.

Dutch Ambassador's Stand

In fighting a losing battle to block the move, Van Kleffens earlier declared the delegates' big government-hoped hostilities would cease at the earliest possible moment. "I see no point in hesitating to say at this time," he added.

Dr. Eelco Kleffens, in almost constant transatlantic telephonic communication with The Hague throughout the day, had repeatedly contended that the fighting was an internal affair and the council had no authority.

An American spokesman said that the United States Government's offer of "good offices" the offer and the Dutch acceptance via indicated that the Indonesian Government would accept, conditionally at least, the U.N. action.

Britain France and Belgium fought the move through the debate, French delegate Alexandre Parodi even telling the council after the balloting that he would have preferred to vote against the resolution but sustained because his veto would have killed it.

General Crerar Reaches Tokyo

Tokyo, Aug. 2. (AP)—Gen. H. D. G. Crerar, senior officer of the Canadian army, and his party arrived at Haneda airport today for an inspection of the occupation.

Crerar will confer with Gen. MacArthur tomorrow. He will review Canadian units in the Tokyo-Yokohama area Wednesday and place a wreath in the Canadian section of the occupation cemetery. An extended visit to the British occupation area in Southern Honshu will follow.

Observers suggested Crerar was visiting Japan as a preliminary to peace treaty talks and to look into possibilities of resuming trade with Japan.

Included in the Crerar Party are Ronald Bock, Montreal industrialist, and Maj.-Gen. Paul J. Mueller, MacArthur's chief of staff; Lt.-Gen. H. D. G. Robertson, commander of British Commonwealth Occupation Forces; E. H. Norman, head of the Canadian Mission, and British Ambassador A. C. Dalius, of Gascoigne.

Police Seek Witness In Woman's Death

Montreal, Aug. 2 —(CP)— A 32-year-old former boy friend who allegedly left a note with the words "We loved each other too much—it had to end" was being sought today by Montreal police as an important witness in the slaying of Genevieve Annette Diotte, 20-year-old candy factory worker.

Under instructions of Coroner Pierre Hebert, detectives were ordered to search for and arrest Roland Fiset, a native of Quebec City, as a witness at the inquest which opens today.

Miss Diotte's body was found yesterday in a tiny one-room apartment on east-end Labelle Street, and a post-mortem which police said was used to strangle her last seen Monday.

A trickle of water from a refrigerator unit which seeped into a lower-floor apartment caused discovery of the body. The victim had been dead since Monday, police said.

On the sofa was an open notebook on the first page of which was a message addressed to whom it may concern."

Police have found another too much. This had to end. I ask forgiveness to my father, mother and brothers and sisters and to all those I loved. Thanks once again to all those who helped me. I ask forgiveness to God for my part sins."

Written in French, it was signed, "R. R. Fiset."

A postscript added: "And I hope that the Diotte family will also forgive me."

Capt. Detective Georges Allain of the homicide squad said he was from police investigation jealousy of Fiset to be the motive for the slaying.

Anti-British Slogans Smeared on Buildings In American Cities

Los Angeles, Aug. 2. (AP)—Four signs bearing swastikas and the words, "British Nazis", were, the outside, The British Consulate on the 11th floor of a downtown office building here last night.

A consulate guard reported he discovered the signs, stenciled on the walls with red paint, when he made his rounds. The signs bore the inscription, "Exodus 1947 and dollar signs.

In Philadelphia, two youths were arrested after a group of pamphlets smeared anti-British slogans and swastikas on the Philadelphia Bulletin building. The building which houses the British Consulate, was not.

Employees of the building washed off the slogans with kerosene.

A-Stockpiles Must be Distributed To Avoid Tempting Aggressors

By FRANCIS W. CARPENTER

Lake Success, Aug. 2 (AP)—United Nations atomic delegates urged today that atomic stockpiles and production facilities must be distributed among the nations to avoid tempting an aggressor to launch an atomic war.

In one of a series of papers which make up a preview of the second report of the U.N. Atomic Energy Commission, a group of delegates declared that the seizure of stockpiles and production facilities, plus factories using nuclear fuel, would be a signal that a country was about "to embark on an atomic war."

Russia did not take part in drafting the papers. Andrei A. Gromyko, Soviet delegate to the Commission, helped prepare them.

"It is of vital importance that production facilities and facilities utilizing nuclear fuel and stockpiles of atomic weapons in any one nation in such a way as to minimize the military advantage that their possession would give to a nation which has aggressive intentions," the delegates said.

"A well-planned distribution could not in itself prevent atomic war but the objective should be to decrease the incentive for anyone deliberately to start war by the temptation to secure a military advantage by surprise."

The paper, framed by the delegates in their individual capacities and still to be approved by their governments, will be tacked by the political committee on the commission next Wednesday. The commission is working on its second report to the Security Council, which must be turned in before the Council's meeting next Sept. 16.

While Russia standing aloof and Poland taking only a slight part, atomic circles in the U.N. speculated that the second report would be approved by a 10-0 vote as was the first. That report also is stalemated on the final vote on the first report, which contained the general framework for an atomic control treaty, and Russia and the Ukraine still were far from agreement on fundamentals.

R.C.M.P. KNOWN FOR SOME TIME CARR IN MEXICO

'Legal Aspects' of Case Prevents Extradition Of Key Figure in Russian Spy Probe

Ottawa, Aug. 2 (AP) —Commissioner S. T. Wood of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police said last night that the force has "known for some time" that Mexico was the hideout of Sam Carr, missing key figure in Canada's Russian spy probe of two years ago, but declared that "we have no instructions to pick him up."

Commissioner Wood said such instructions would come from the Justice Department and he believed "the legal aspects" of extradition was the cause of lack of any orders to go after the former organizer for Labor Progressive party who was named ordered by several Communists as one of those involved in Russian spy activities in Canada.

No authorities of the Justice Department could be reached for comment but it was believed that the existing extradition treaty between Canada and Mexico might make if difficult to get Carr out of the latter country to face conspiracy charges in Canada.

The only extradition treaty said to be in operation now is one signed between Britain and Mexico in 1886 and which applies to Canada. Some lawyers expressed doubt as to whether the offences with which Carr is charged would be covered by this treaty. Carr was the national organizer of the Labor Progressive party and disappeared when the party broke with communism after a Royal Commission in February 1946. Since that time his photograph and description have appeared on "wanted" cards in post offices and public buildings throughout Canada.

Carr has at various times been reported in different parts of Canada. The first concrete hint that he was in Mexico came in a story which appeared in the Canadian Police Gazette, a secret service devoted to police activities in Canada, by a writer who said he had met Carr in Guadalajara where he was said to be living.

No Embargo Likely On Coal Shipments

Washington, Aug. 2 — (AP) The State Department has no intention of applying any embargo on Canadian coal shipments to the United States, Homer C. King, assistant director of the Office of International Trade, authoritatively said last night.

Asked about reports that such a move was likely, King told a reporter simply: "There is nothing to it." The said coal cars in Canada "are coming back home."

King said he had no late figures on how many coal cars might be in Canada.

The United States has been suffering from a car shortage for some time.

No authorities of the Justice Department could be reached for comment but it was believed that the existing extradition treaty between Canada and Mexico might make if difficult to get Carr out of the latter country to face conspiracy charges in Canada.

The only extradition treaty said to be in operation now is one signed between Britain and Mexico in 1886 and which applies to Canada. Some lawyers expressed doubt as to whether the offences with which Carr is charged would be covered by this treaty. Carr was the national organizer of the Labor Progressive party and disappeared when the party broke with communism after a Royal Commission in February 1946. Since that time his photograph and description have appeared on "wanted" cards in post offices and public buildings throughout Canada.

Carr has at various times been reported in different parts of Canada. The first concrete hint that he was in Mexico came in a story which appeared in the Canadian Police Gazette, a secret service devoted to police activities in Canada, by a writer who said he had met Carr in Guadalajara where he was said to be living.

Dept. of Defence Bureaucrats Sought to Impose Military Censorship Says Head of C.P.

Toronto, Aug. 2 (CP)—Canada might have had peace-time military censorship for the first months of the war if certain elements in the Department of National Defence had had their way, Gillis Purcell writes in the current issue of International Journal, published by the Canadian Institute of International Affairs.

Because of their dissatisfaction with voluntary censorship during the conscription crisis of November, 1944, these elements were determined to impose military censorship, Mr. Purcell, General Manager of The Canadian Press, says in an article on wartime press censorship in Canada.

"The director of censorship gently but firmly stifled the case against military censorship in a memorandum of Dec. 11, 1944, circulated to officers at National Defence Headquarters; it is questionable whether any newspaper representation in opposition to a military censorship could have been more to the point."

Six-Year Study

The article, condensed from a 50,000-word analysis compiled in a six-year study, outlines the principles on which the voluntary press censorship was based, its organization and its successes. Underlying factors in censorship and their relation to the operation of a fighting democracy are analyzed.

The point of speech in Canada hung in the balance in the latter part of the war when editors "came to Ottawa" to protest edicts unquestioningly as fair and proper," Mr. Purcell writes. But the censors, "knowing facts the press could not know, pressed for the rights of the people against the conservative nature of bureaucracy."

To avoid such danger in any future censorship, Mr. Purcell suggests the press of the country should be given access to the facts. This could be done by setting up an advisory committee of newspaper men with a definite voice in the censorship policy and access to all the secret censorship files or by appointment of one newspaper representative as full-time consultant with censors and services.

Four Incidents Cited

Four incidents which became topics of public discussion are detailed—the Houde and Hanson statements in the latter half of 1946, the Drew letter in 1942 and the so-called "Zombie" incident at the start of 1945.

Orders Given To Prevent Reds Taking Equipment

Berlin, Aug. 2 (AP)—Policemen, standing guard at a German factory in the United States sector of Berlin which was ordered closed by the Russians, have been issued war materials for "a foreign power", told correspondents today they had orders to prevent any of the plant's equipment from being removed by the Russians.

The plant under guard was the Mariendorf Unit of the Askania Works, big scientific instruments industry. This plant and another Askania unit in the borough of Friedenau, also in the United States sector, were ordered shut down by the Russian Control Government when investigators reported they were delivering precision instruments and other parts for war machines to the foreign power.

Five officials of the plants were taken into custody and are expected to be tried before an American military government general court.

Nitrate Ship Sails Without Part of Cargo

New York, Aug. 2 (AP)—An ammonium nitrate-laden ship sailed for Antwerp last night leaving part of its general cargo here with New York port workshoremen refused to load the ship and Fire Commissioner Frank Quayle ordered it out of the port.

Another nitrate ship similarly banned by the fire commissioner was anchored at a safe distance in Gravesend Bay today while her cargo of ammonium nitrate was loaded and attempt to load general cargo by lighter.

The ships were the Madaket and the Bolda, Norwegian-flag vessels, which came here with partial loads of fertilized. Explosions aboard vessels similarly loaded caused the Texas City and Brest, France, disasters.

The Madaket, whose nitrate cargo is destined for Germany, sailed without 1,200 tons of other cargo which longshoremen said today they would not load unless they got double "ammunition" pay.

CHARGE TWO MEN WITH MURDERING VALAIR VANDEBELT

New Evidence Found Of Sensational Type Says Inspector In Nurse's Death Probe

Cochrane, Aug. 2 —(CP)— Two Cochrane men, Rocco Sisco and Roger Gauthier, were charged yesterday with the murder of Valair Vandebelt, 22-year-old Toronto nurse, and Ontario Provincial Police announced evidence of a "sensational nature" would be produced at their preliminary hearing.

The good looking brunette's body was found June 23 in the bush at Silver Queen Lake, 15 miles north. Only 10 a.m. that estimated that the Jew had been dead 12 hours. Two Arabs near the scene said, Curtis reported, that they had seen the body being carried in a passing car, Clark's short time earlier.

Curtis said the all-Jewish metropolis of Tel Aviv was "just about back to normal today" after a night and day of violence apparently touched off by the death Sisco and Gauthier were arrested late yesterday. They had appeared at the coroner's inquest when a Saturday night party at Sisco's home, which was variously described, the men testifying that the house had decided to remain at the cabin after the rest of the party had departed.

New Evidence Uncovered, Says Inspector.

The arrests of Sisco and Gauthier, Inspector W. J. Brooks of the provincial police said, followed the uncovering of new evidence uncovered since the inquest was adjourned. Inspector W. J. Franks of the Criminal Investigation Branch, Bureau, said:

"I can only say that new evidence, which did not come out at the inquest, has been uncovered. Naturally, the police are not going to elaborate on its nature. It will all come out at the preliminary hearing. I can tell you it will be of a sensational nature."

Following the arrests, it was announced that the body would be exhumed under an order from Coroner Pierre Hebert, and Prof. W. R. Robinson, Professor of Pathology at the University of Toronto, performed a post mortem with a consulting pathologist, Dr. Gordon Hanna, of Hanna's Department. This examination, the police had announced, followed new evidence tendered by Inspector Franks.

Dr. Robinson outlined his findings last Tuesday at a conference of Crown Attorney Gerald A. Snyder, Deputy Attorney-General Leslie Blackwell, K.C., and Hope, K.C., solicitor of the Attorney-General's Department. It was then decided that murder charges would be laid. Mr. Snyder and Inspector Franks then drafted a new aspect following the second autopsy.

Sisco and Gauthier are expected to be arraigned before a justice of the peace in Cochrane this morning to be remanded, probably to probably 8 Haileybury, 200 miles from Cochrane where better jail facilities are available.

Provincial Constable M. M. Purdy said in the latter half of July of Sisco and Gauthier, said he thought they were drunk and asked him to "drop around" to the courthouse. Gauthier was brought in by Purdy to the courthouse by Provincial Constables Earl Woods, Hall and four after Purdy made his call Sisco approached the group and made enormous remarks as photographers snapped their pictures.

Inspector Franks said neither man expressed any great surprise when told that a charge was laid. The inspector said it would be some time before the date is set for the preliminary hearing.

London, Aug. 2 (CP)—Highly-skilled craftsmen, their bags packed and tools in readiness, today started to join the first flight of 40 emigrants taking off from Northolt Airport at 6 p.m. (1 p.m. EDT) over Toronto under the provincial government scheme.

Haul of Firearms Made in Outskirts Of Jerusalem

Two Men Arrested in House Where Discovery is Made

By CARTER L. DAVIDSON

Jerusalem, Aug. 2 (AP).— An unidentified Jew was found slain today on a roadside near Petah Tikva east of Tel Aviv.

Authorities expressed belief he was one of two Jews reported abducted by English-speaking men in uniform south of Tel Aviv about two weeks ago.

Edward Curtis of the Associated Press reported from Tel Aviv that a taxicab driver told him he found the body at 10 a.m. and estimated that the Jew had been dead 12 hours. Two Arabs near the scene said, Curtis reported, that they had seen the body being carried in a passing car, Clark's short time earlier.

Curtis said the all-Jewish metropolis of Tel Aviv was "just about back to normal today" after a night and day of violence apparently touched off by the death Sisco and Gauthier were arrested late yesterday. The walls of the Soviet embassy in Washington, D.C., were plastered with signs reading, "Beware of Spies Working," "Murder, Inc.," and "Owners Moving Soon." Michael S. Vavilov, first secretary of the embassy, is shown, bottom, as he removed one of the signs. He told reporters that "this is the work of the followers of Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, Soviet-American relations." Dan Lohbeck, of St. Louis, who said that he represented the National Christian Youth of America (top, seated in car), admitted that he had tacked up some of the signs. Lohbeck is being questioned by Secretary Vavilov.

Portable Transmitter Set Used at Picnic

Radio Electronic Technicians Association of the city held their second annual picnic at Presqu'ile Point last Wednesday. R.E.T.A. members from Belleville and vicinity towns attended this interesting gathering and a game of softball was played by everyone, including the ladies.

As several R.E.T.A. members hold amateur transmitting licenses, a portable transmitter was set up on the location and communication was successfully established with another amateur transmitter station many miles away in the U.S.A. This was a major accomplishment, when considering the fact that although all the aerial was of temporary nature and all the equipment put up under a tree in the open. Of keen interest to the ladies present was the for a Home Craft Electric Cooker, presented to the Radio Technicians by Jas. Biggs of the Ltd. of Belleville. The lucky winner of this fine appliance was Mrs. Alex Moring of 114 Moira street east of the city.

Chimney Sweep Held for Theft

When an itinerant chimney sweep was engaged to sweep a chimney at the Martin Funeral Home this week, the "sweep" made almost a clean sweep—both of the chimneys and also of considerable cleaning equipment.

When the chimney sweep was completed the "sweep" disappeared from the premises taking with him four suit cases containing embalming equipment. The suit cases later were pawned off apparently to obtain money for drinking.

Natural inquisitiveness on the part of Angus Duffy, A.R.P. Duty Service Station, led to the recovery of one of the suitcases. Mr. Duffy had loaned $2.00 to the "sweep" taking the suitcase as collateral, later opening the case to find that it was owned by Martin's.

A check of the city led to the apprehension of one Lionel Rose, aged 55, of no given address. He was identified as the chimney sweep and is in custody facing a charge of theft as well—as an L.C.A. charge. Only one suitcase has been recovered.

Proprietor of 'Chez Henri' Has Had Unique Career as Restaurateur

Official opening of the "Chez Henri", Belleville's newest restaurant today will not only fill a long felt need in the community for a restaurant of high distinction, but will also serve to introduce the proprietor Henri Maillard as a colorful personality with an international reputation in the culinary arts.

Possessed of a warm and gregarious disposition Henri is nevertheless reserved in matters pertaining to personal experiences which have brought contacts with European royalty, presidents of the United States, members of the British peerage and international celebrities.

Born in Switzerland in 1892, Henri's earliest desire and ambition was to enter the culinary field, this opportunity first presented itself when he procured a job as porter with a local hostelry. The term "porter" is misleading as no connection with the position of the same name in America and entailed meeting of incoming trains and escorting previously reserved tourists to the hotel.

Mr. Henri Maillard, whose restaurant, "Ches Henri," opens today.

Met Distinguished Personages

After two years Henri left Switzerland to become a waiter at the "Pyrenees Orientales" on the Spanish-French border, where he came in contact with distinguished visitors including King Alfonso of Spain, Lord Roberts of Ireland, Lord Kipling and Rudyard Kipling.

A year later he crossed into Spain and worked at the "Casino De La Rabassada" in Barcelona, which was a famous gambling resort somewhat similar to Monte Carlo, but smaller.

Like most international culinarians, Henri left Switzerland in order to gain further experience and an interest sustained him Henri so that a year later saw him safely ensconced in the famous "Hotel Ritz" in Madrid, which still exists today. In later years it was to become the British capital of London and thence across the North Atlantic to the New World. It is quite possible that his appetite for meeting international celebrities and gorgeously-gowned women may have been stimulated by the British and North American courtesy of which many "Ritz" pilgrimages to "Madame Paquin"—the mecca of up-to-date fashion whose salons were situated directly opposite the "Ritz." Also in the dining lounge of the "Meurice" that both "Madames" and "Models" would adjourn for a bite a tete after business hours.

Many Changes

Three months before outbreak of the 1914-18 war found Henri working in London, England, moving from one hostelry to another in a desire to gain more experience at each succeeding establishment. The "Trocadero," "Piccadilly Hotel," "Cecil Hotel" (then the largest in London) "The Royal Automobile Club" and the internationally famous "Savoy Hotel" were, among the places cherished in the memory of Mr. Henri's experience. It was at the latter hotel that he was signally honored in being personally assigned to cater to the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, at that time Assistant Secretary of the Navy during the war.

At a later date he was to administer to the wants of ex-President Hoover, then Allied Chairman of European Food Relief. Then there was Marshal Joffre, Generalissimo of the French Armies, Victory at the Battle of the Marne has made Joffre famous wherever the French tongue is spoken. Among the distinguished of which there were many, was the celebrated "Elinor Glyn" whose book in the "Three Weeks" caused an international furore.

According to Henri's description there is nothing to compare in splendor and extravagance as that displayed by the Provincial Princes of India. Indian "Rajas," "The Maharajas of "Patialla", "Bikaneir" and "Alwah" respectively were his personal charges.

Unique Experience

One of his most unique experiences took place in the "Cecil Hotel" which was famous for its enormous banquet and dancing capacity. The outstanding feature was the "Royal Caledonian Ball" which was a gathering of "Scottish Chieftains". Dressed in their full regalia and surrounded by their respective clans in which diamond studded tartans and jewellery of untold wealth would be displayed, all doors leading to the ball-room would be carefully guarded by special detectives.

On one such occasion Henri being friendly with the chief detective, was taken aside by the latter and confidentially shown two handfuls of diamonds and rubies which had been lost on the floor. Incidently, this same detective was of German origin and on the outbreak of the First World War rendered invaluable service to the Allied cause by assisting Scotland Yard in rounding up numerous German spies living in England. It should be mentioned that Henri was a guest of honor, then Prince of Wales, was an enthusiastic devotee of the "Royal Caledonian Ball".

Came to Canada in '25

The year 1925 found Henri working in Canada at the Mount Royal Hotel, Montreal, then known as the "United Hotel". He stated about eight months.

His next position in Henri's own words—constituted the crowning achievement of his life's experience. The Royal York Hotel in Toronto was being opened and to Henri was offered the coveted distinction in being the head waiter at night. His personal staff consisted of over four hundred men and women. The success of this gigantic undertaking and the service rendered him by his employers, The Canadian Pacific Railroad, may perhaps be estimated by his being asked to organize the famous Epicurean Club at which he remained for about three years, after which he went to the General Brock Hotel, Niagara Falls, where, in addition to gaining experience of the most his wife, to whom he has been happily married ever since.

In the year 1930 another change was decided upon and he left Canada with his wife and came to Belleville and has been steward of the Belleville Club for six years. He says this has represented the six happiest years of his life, possibly because of his assistance of Mrs. Maillard, on the other hand, both the clientele and service of the Belleville Club have had the benefit of his European and North American experience. This fact is substantiated by his having remained in this one job for five years—a period much longer than in any previous position.

It was in Belleville that Henri recently acquired Canadian citizenship. His new restaurant signifies his retirement from travel and he says he has no desire to serve the community. He is not only a Canadian—he is also a good citizen of Belleville.

Struck Beverage Waiter, Fined $10 and Costs

That it does not pay to take physical revenge for being "cut off" by a beverage room waiter, was proved in police court by Gordon Greaves, city, in Magistrate's Court, yesterday morning when he was assessed $10 and costs following his plea of guilty on an assault charge.

Greaves had been indulging in a few beers at a local beverage room and to use a common expression had eventually been "cut off" by the waiter. He accused had remained outside the hotel door and as the waiter emerged to go home had assaulted him by striking him in the face with a fist. The assault charge resulted.

Drunk Driving

Two men appeared on drunk driving charges, one pleading guilty and was sentenced to the usual seven days. In addition he accused faced a second charge of driving without an operator's permit and was fined $10 and costs by) Magistrate T. Y. Wills. The other man appearing on the drunk driving charge had his case enlarged for one week.

Given Liberty.

Harry Curtiss, no given address appearing on the charge sheet, was given his liberty by the magistrate after he had been held for several days by police for investigation.

Geo. Black Will Not Seek Re-election

White Horse, Y.T., Aug. 2 (CP) — George Black, Yukon Territorial Conservative member of parliament for the Yukon and chairman of the House of Commons, announced here last night that he would not seek re-election again because parliament re-redistribution had more than doubled the area of his constituency.

Mr. Black said the size of the Yukon riding, by adding Mackenzie to it, now was 700,000 square miles—larger than Alberta and British Columbia combined.

Children's Swimming Pool Presented

A wading pool costing $2,500 was presented to the City of Kingston Thursday evening by the Lions Club of that city, in a brief ceremony attended by city and club dignitaries.

Alert C.N.R. Employee Saves Lives Of Three Children Walking on Tracks

The presence of mind and coolness of action of Mr. Anthony Genova, 7 Starling street, is responsible for saving the lives of three small children last evening, as he stood with them in front of the C.N.R. passenger train at the Cannifton crossing at 7.05 p.m. last evening.

Mr. Genova is an employee of the C.N.R. track gang and was off duty at the time. He was delivering a lunch to a client last evening when he noticed the three children on the track coming from the direction of the Montreal-Toronto flyer. Disregarding personal safety, Mr. Genova raced to the children, seized the two girls by the hand and ordered the small boy to run. They escaped in the nick of time.

Two of the children, Joan, nine years old, and Jimmie, six, are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Stuart Bull, 27½ A Dufferin avenue.

"It has been a terrible worry and shock to us," stated Mrs. Bull over the phone this morning. "It is terrible."

The other child, Diane Burley is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Burley, 23 Meyers street. The three children were out walking last evening when the near tragedy occurred.

In running the children Mr. Genova stated that one of the little girls stumbled as he was hurrying her off the tracks and skinned her leg slightly. This is the only mishap thanks to Mr. Genova's quick action.

Shortage of Girls Worrying D.N.V.

Montreal, Aug. 2 (CP) —A reported shortage of girls in the area north of Lake Superior is worrying some of the displaced persons from the Baltic and Ukraine who arrived in Canada this week to take jobs as lumberjacks.

"They told us there are not many girls where we are going," said one of the D.N.V.'s last night. "And there will be thousands of us coming here to work, so things will be very bad."

A group of 276 of these new immigrants had a one-hour stopover here on the way from Halifax to the Ontario lumber camps where the men will work.

NASCOPIE HERO

Shown above is Alex Stevenson, of Ottawa, whose work aboard the Nascopie was praised by his officer in charge. Crew of the Nascopie wreck was blamed by officials as a combination of circumstances beyond human control.

HIGHLY-SKILLED

This is certainly a good way for a little hometown girl to see the world.

The Skymaster carrying the emigrants will stop at Gander, Nfld., en route to Malton airport in Toronto.

Youngest of the group was B. S. Refell, 16, of Downham Market, who hopes to become a lumberman. Mothers were accompanying their husbands including Mrs. Refell of Downham Bournemouth. Both she and her husband plan to be farmers there although Blow, who is a licensed test pilot, hopes to combine the two when he has his own farm using a plane for crop spraying.

Others in the group included Miss Dorothy M. Gilbert of Dunstable, Bedfordshire, who has been working at the Red Lion hotel in Luton. She hopes to enter hotel work in Toronto, where her uncle, Roland Harman, lives.

John Lloyd and Gerald Workman, both of London, jumped into last-minute places when two other passengers dropped out. One was delayed by documentation formalities and the other decided to remain in England.

Before leaving for the airport the travellers were surrounded by relatives, photographers and reporters.

IN MEMORIAM

WORLEY — In loving memory of our son-in-law, Harold G. Worley, who died one year ago, August 3rd, 1939.
We think of him today,
We think of him always,
No year can ever take away
The memory that lingers.
— Mr. and Mrs. F. Glover.

WORLEY — In loving memory of a dear son, Harold G. Worley, who died at Belleville General Hospital one year ago, August 3rd, 1939.
Oh, how we would we give to clasp his hand
His dear, kind face to see,
To hear his voice and answer votes,
That meant so much to me.
No one knows the aching heartache,
Only those who have such can tell
That he here is silence,
For the one we loved so well.
— Remembered by his wife, Norma and children, Barbara, Bobby and Carolyn.

BLAND, ERNEST — In loving remembrance of our dearest Dad, who left us August 3rd, 1934.

Former S.S. Man On Trial for His Part in Shooting

Hamburg, Aug. 2 (CP)—Erich Adler, former S.S. sergeant, yesterday told the military court trying him on charges of complicity in the murder of Allied airmen, that he participated in the shooting of an R.C.A.F. officer and his British companion because he thought they were British parachute spies trying to escape.

Acherath is charged specifically in connection with the deaths of Fl./Lt. G. Holder of St. Catharines, Ont., and Sqdn. Ldr. T. G. Kirby-Green, R.A.F., two of 50 officers who escaped from Stalag Luft III prison camp in January, 1944 and were killed after their recapture. Six Canadians are alleged to have been among those killed.

The former S.S. man earlier claimed that a written statement, admitting that he carried out an order to shoot Kidder was "wrong and inadmissible" because it was made "under pressure."

"Because I thought the prisoners were spies and secret agents I didn't see very much to get out of this job since I myself and family to danger," he said.

Claiming that Kidder and Kirby-Green tried to escape, Acharath said:

"All four of us who went out with this party fired when the prisoners ran off. I was glad it turned out this way and I didn't have to shoot without reason."

Acharias also is vented by Czechoslovakia on charges of killing 400 Czech patriots during the German occupation of that country.

No Polio Cases Reported in City

While isolated cases of the dread poliomyelitis have been noted in various sections of the province, authorities here today stated that no victims of the disease have been reported in the city.

Seven cases have occurred in Ottawa this season than were reported during the same period last year.

Preventive measures depend on the co-operation of the public and include all measures which protect food, flies and drinking water, as the following: (1) Be sure your food is protected from flies. Have your house thoroughly screened and kill every fly that gains entry before it reaches your food. An insecticide containing DDT must be used. (2) If you have an outside toilet make sure it is fly-proof and use plenty of chloride of lime. (3) Keep your garbage covered to prevent the breeding of flies. (4) Do not eat raw fruit or vegetables until they are thoroughly washed or peeled. This includes salads. Buy fruit picked from the bushes or trees. Do not eat fruit bought from stalls or vans. (5) Wash all dishes and cooking utensils in boiling hot water. (6) Do not bathe or swim in polluted waters. (7) Do not allow children to over-exercise or get chilled, and see that they get extra rest and sleep. Avoid crowds. In case of illness in children the family doctor should be consulted.

Ex-Hubbie too Trusting

Port Huron, Mich., Aug. 2. (CP)—When Gerald T. Lomasney gave his divorced wife two thousand dollars cheques for groceries he asked her to fill in the amounts of $50 each, he testified in court yesterday, charging that she made one out for $50,000 and the other for $10,000.

He asked an injunction to restrain his wife from cashing the $10,000 cheque and a court order to make her repay what is left of the $20,000 cheque.

BULLETINS FROM BIRDLAND

WINIFRED E. WILSON

"Listen to Mrs. Wren calling her children to bed." Vera sang out. "She's collecting them at the back of the house. Where do you suppose she has picked the spot for bedtime?"

When young wrens make their first flight they do not go far good. Do not Everything for weeks they are brought back and forth to the nest. Sometimes, once the children will no longer sit contentedly into their own house, which was made by a boy scout ten years ago, their loving parents scour around to find a suitable deserted nest.

One time the locality pleased us immensely. Sitting on the verandah after a wild night into a Robin's old nest in the spruce tree, and here the Wrens gathered their youngsters at sundown. It sometimes took twenty minutes. One after another the little ones was obeyed their mother's continued call. "Cheek, cheek, cheek," appeared from some bushes, hopped into their new home, and cuddled down.

Another year a Song Sparrow's nest given them sleeping accommodation; but last summer we were kept guessing. Early on July 14th the first flight took place. Promptly at 5.30 p. m. we heard papa singing and mama calling, and soon the five buntytailed Wrenlets were safely tucked down in the beautifully made but tiny saucer that the Chipping Sparrows had vacated on June 30th. And the night this proved to be inadequate for the fast-growing Wrenlets' so next they were led to the Catbird's more spacious but ill-constructed old home, which they took over until July 23rd.

That evening, as Vera said, the "chucking" came from a different direction. Presently she again called out to me this time her voice registering more coherent concern. "Look! They are getting into the Vireo's nest! The last few days before those birds left we were afraid the grass that bound it to the forked maple branch was getting away. I don't think it's safe!"

Long after dark we were just preparing for bed ourselves when we heard a terrible commotion in the maple tree. Vireo wrens were all talking excitedly. Blackness hid their movements, and we could not see what had, or was happening, as you are guessing now.

When we investigated next morning of course we found the Vireos gone, but the Catbird Wrens were perfect parents; only the youngest had been at fault. However, all seven survived, though we never found their fifth home.

Traffic Peak on Highways

"This weekend with the civic holiday on August 4th is a critical period," says Highways Minister Doucett pointing out the fact to motorists and pedestrians that motor traffic is now at a record peak and that traffic accident hazards are therefore greatly increased.

"Our engineering surveys of traffic volume in key points throughout the province indicate that the traffic over this weekend will be 10 to 20 per cent higher than over the same period last year, when two persons were killed each day."

More traffic always increases accident hazards, he warns as he points to the fact that 376 persons were killed in Ontario by automobiles during April, May and June, more than in any other second quarter since 1939.

The Minister gives the timely advice, to exercise patience in "the long lines of holiday traffic" for there is a temptation to cut out of line and pass where oncoming traffic cannot be seen. That temptation must be resisted by drivers.

Another temptation to avoid is that of going through built up areas at highway speeds.

The position of speed is governed by conditions. Speed limits are posted on signs for the best of conditions on the roads concerned — therefore any speed is illegal if road or traffic conditions make it dangerous.

The car driver will realize that traffic laws, signals and signs are to protect, all motorists, not to irritate them. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent on white lines and on signs to indicate curves, speed limits and places where it is dangerous to try to pass. Every motorist has contributed his share in the taxes that pay for these roads to protect him, and he is only wasting his own money when he disregards them in his own driving. Those are the Minister's own words.

"After all, the only good driving is sane driving. It is the only safe driving. There is every reason that motorists should be most careful and every motorist has a right to expect that every other driver as well will himself has a right to expect everyone to obey the regulations of travel which are made for one purpose — to make driving safe.

All the advantages of driving are secured only if every driver obeys the rules by instinct. Any driving but safe and sane driving nuns everything and leads to accidents, sorrow and destruction.

With every driver a sane and safe driver, motoring would be a much less anxious and far more happy experience.

American Optical Company

An event of interest to all citizens of Belleville and district in the business houses of the city took place this week, the turning of the sod for the American Optical Company's plant on the extension of Bridge Street and Wellington Street.

Belleville has been the home of this company for a quarter of a century and the plant-to-be will crown the harmony of the many years in which this company has carried on its business here. The company has become an integral part of the city's expanding life and has contributed no small share by its good will. The new undertaking marks the happy augury of a century in which the company and the city have been so linked together in the march of progress. What the Optical Company has achieved in Belleville is a matter for sincere congratulation for it has been an inspiration to the entire business fabric of the city. The company may well be proud of its achievements and the citizens too are very proud of the Optical Company which has in no small way helped to develop and expand the community. It has aided in no small way in helping its progress and in adding to the happiness of its people.

A future of great promise is seen for this firm and for the municipality. One good sign of this faith in the city's future is in the building of the new plant of the American Optical Company. This optimism and confidence in this city of homes and industry are warrant for the highest hopes of the times ahead.

The relations existing between the city and its commercial and industrial life have always been of the most cordial nature. These mutual feelings of good will will continue in the future.

The new plant will be an honor to the firm and to the city, which is proud of its industries and its industrial leaders and its people.

One of the happiest phases of the life of industry in Belleville is the good will of the leaders of industry and enterprise with the community and its people. Citizens' honor these men who have been able to serve this community in many ways.

Unusual Gold Ore

In the early mining days, most of the world's gold came from placers — gravel and sand deposits in stream beds. California, the Klondike and Australia are familiar names. Such deposits were easily mined, but today most of our gold comes from lode mining, requiring shafts, drifts and stopes in hard rock, and big mills, involving much capital. There are a few beach placers, such as the one near the mouth of the Yukon River, near Nome, Alaska, where the gold occurs in the beach gravel and sand.

Imagine a great beach placer, far larger than any known in the world today, being buried under thousands of feet of sediment and lavas. About 1,500,000,000 years ago in Precambrian time, something like this occurred in South Africa. Today they are mining to a depth of over 8,000 feet, in some places, this ancient placer deposit. The ore occurs in beds of conglomerate made up of rounded pebbles and sand grains cemented together, not in quartz veins like our Canadian gold. This field, by far the greatest in the world, has produced $21,000,000,000 in gold. A good exhibit of this unusual gold ore may now be seen in the Royal Ontario Museum.

The Season's Charm

Civic Holiday brings the breathing space in which the people crowd to resorts and the roads and highways seeking places near and far for their delight in the weather which August usually brings.

It is picnic and holiday time. The summer is nearly half over and September will bring the first touches of the year's decline towards the autumn.

People give themselves wholeheartedly to summer. They have all become acclimatized or sun-burned and there is enjoyment for everyone in the bountiful attractions of Canada.

Canada Gives Hospital

Another example of Canada's generosity is the Canadian Red Cross Memorial Hospital at Cleveden, presented to Britain each year by the Canadian Red Cross Society and the Canadian Government and opened recently by the Minister of Health, Mr. Ansurin Bevan. He described the hospital as "a fine example of the co-operation and intimacy of the ties which bind our Canadian friends and ourselves together." Plans are well advanced for the establishment at the hospital of a national centre for the study and treatment of cardiac rheumatism in children.

A maternity unit was opened in January. The hospital will not be a voluntary or municipal hospital, but primarily a national hospital. Many mothers and children from all over Britain will thus in the future have the greatest reason to be sincerely grateful to Canada for the gift which they will find in this pleasant building set among conifers — the gift of good health, says Vancouver Province.

Comfort for Cattle

Cattle cars are becoming as comfortable, almost, as Pullmans. At any rate, they have anti-friction roller-bearing journal boxes and the latest sorts of spring underframes and air brakes, and they make it possible to cut the former travel time from range to market in half.

That is as it should be. Nothing can be too good for the gentle creatures that provide us with beefsteak, if and when we can afford it. — New York Times.

Fate! There is no fate. Between the thought and the success' God is the only agent. — Bulwer.

If you are pleased at finding faults, you are displeased at finding perfections.— Lavalier.

JUST FOLKS

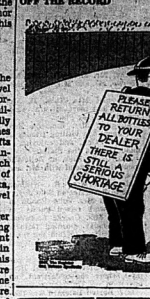
THE COW

The placid cow has time to spare,
But scarce a fancy in her head.
Of joy or grief—if she's aware—
No word of it she's ever said.



Instinctively her young she feeds.
Unmoved she sees it join the herd;
And once supplied her body's needs,
She settles down without a word.

No thought has she of good or ill
Beyond the common wish to live.
She knows no craft requiring skill
Or any cause to which to give.

No hope, no God to whom to pray!
No love, no tried and trusting friend!
Never one word of cheer to say:

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

How did "kiosk" originate?

"Kiosk" (pronounced "keh-OSSK") is derived through French "kiosque" from Turkish "kiushk," pavilion, and Persian "kushk," palace, or open pavilion. To Turkey and Persia a kiosk is a light open pavilion or summer house supported by pillars and generally covered with vines or flowering plants and often with a closing a fountain. Ibnbatuta, the 14th-century Arabian traveller, wrote: "When he was returned from his expedition, and drawing near the capital, he ordered his son to build him a palace, or as they call it, a kushk, in the field, the side of a river that runs at that place, which is called Ghanpur."

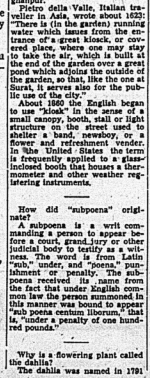
Pietro della Valle, Italian traveler in Asia, wrote about 1623: "There is (in the garden) running water which enters the gate, the entrance of a great kiosk, or covered place, where one may stay to take the air, which is built at the end of the pond, and a great pond which adjoins the outside of the garden, so that, like the one at Surat, it serves also for the public use of the city."

About 1860 the English began to use "kiosk" in the sense of a small canopy, booth, stall or light structure on the street used to shelter a band, newsboy, or a flower and refreshment vendor. In the United States the term is frequently applied to a small enclosed booth that houses a thermometer and other weather registering instruments.

How did "subpoena" originate?

A subpoena is a writ commanding a person to appear before a court, grand jury or other judicial body to testify as a witness. The word is from Latin "sub," under, and "poena," punishment or penalty. The subpoena received its name from the fact that under English common law the person summoned in this manner was bound to appear "sub poena centum liborum," that is, "under a penalty of one hundred pounds."

Why is a flowering plant called the dahlia?



The dahlia was named in 1791 in honor of Andreas Dahl, Swedish botanist and pupil of Linnaeus, from specimens seen by the German naturalist, Baron Alexander von Humboldt. Dahlias comprise a small genus of tuberous-rooted, herbaceous herbs of the thistle family and are indigenous to Mexico and Central America. Some varieties of the plant were grown by the Aztec and were taken to Spain in the 16th century. The variety was introduced into England from Spain in 1789 by the Marchioness of Bute.

Asks for Fair Deal For Gas Consumers

Editor,
Ontario Intelligencer

Now that the taxpayers of the city have voted to close the gas plant at December 31st, 1947, arrangements should immediately be made to take care of this situation. Our electric utility has profited mightily at the expense of the gas plant, which I think the Public Utility Commission should take some part in reimbursing those gas users who will be compelled to change over to electricity.

I would suggest that gas equipment be taken over at a fair price in exchange for electric stoves, that the consumer be given a fair deal, and that Utility Commission take care of the loss eventhtatio eta etao shr DL even if it has to be financed over three or four years. I am sure the Hydro Electric Commission in Toronto would see that this is the correct thing to do and would sanction it.

N.S. Scots Recall Saga of MacLeod Landing in 1827

St. Ann's, N.S., Aug. 2 —(CP)— Through the glens of New Scotland and the Highland settlements of St. Ann's harbor the bagpipe pulsed and the Nova Scotia paused to recall the saga of Hev. Norman MacLeod who landed on these shores 120 years ago and remained to hew out a chunk of land destined for the New World.

It was the third and final day of the ninth Gaelic Mod—a festival of celtic culture and folk lore. Over 5,000 persons officially opened Wednesday by Chief Flora, the MacLeod of MacLeod, 28th chief of the Clan MacLeod, who travelled from Dunvegan Castle in the misty Isle of Skye.

In 1828 MacLeod and his six little barques were swept into St. Ann's Harbor by a rattling Atlantic storm. The little band sailed through MacLeod later continued on to New Zealand, and today there are 70,000 descendants of their pioneering. Few of the Scottish exiles in Cape Breton, Half of them speak the Gaelic tongue. A language that remains one of the rising and falling wave of the lands of Scotland.

In the Gaelic Foundation College were given little replicas of the early pioneers, reading and writing. The first man to build a craft centre — one log cabin — turns out 75 of the 200 Scottish clans.

Mrs. MacLeod, spry even at 60, sat knitting as the sons of the clan singing, dancing and bagpipe playing yesterday. She presided and expected to do the same today. Only a few found the sword dancing equal to that which was seen in her native Scotland and the spirited enthusiasm failed after each number.

No Gaelic Mod since honoring the Cape Breton pioneers will be marked by Viscount Melville, MacKenzie, and the English version will be delivered by Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor General.

The program will be opened by Hon. D. W. Morrison of Glace Bay, N.S.

Secretary of Nfld. Delegation Knows 100,000 of 325,000 People on Island

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Aug. 2 — (CP) — One of the most colorful participants in the talks here on possible terms of union, between Canada and Newfoundland is Joseph R. Smallwood, writer, broadcaster, secretary of the seven-man delegation from the island colony.

The friendly, talkative but unassuming former newspaperman has had a varied career and one might expect to pack into 42-odd years of life what many Confederationists on the island predict will reach an climax through election as premier of Canada's 10th province.

His reputation for remembering names and faces rivals that of former Postmaster General Farley of the United States. It is said that Mr. Smallwood personally knows 100,000 of the 325,000 people in Newfoundland and has visited 1,000 of the 1,900 communities in Newfoundland.

He always claimed his newspaper work as his profession before his full time was taken in the political field. He has worked on newspapers in St. John's, Nfld. in Halifax, Boston, New York and London, Eng.

Writes Seven Books

He has written seven books on Newfoundland and has built up a reputation as a radio commentator. He has also had a hand in organizing the fishermen and cooperative movements in the island.

More recently, he pioneered the movement to have Newfoundland come to Ottawa to discuss the possibility of the island going into Confederation. When a national convention was being elected in Newfoundland to study and to recommend future forms of government for the now commissioned controlled island, Mr. Smallwood was the first candidate to openly advocate Confederation. He was elected by one of the largest majorities ever given a candidate in Newfoundland.

Between the start of the convention sittings Sept. 2 and Oct. 3 he got 71 convention members to pledge support to his motion for sending a delegation to Ottawa and everyone knows how it was put it was finished 45-18.

Mr. Smallwood revived his motion four months later—last February—and it was carried 34-16.

Now he is in Ottawa as secretary of the delegation and is hopeful that Confederation will come about before another year goes by.

Horizontal Rain —It's Stupendous

High River, Alta., Aug. 2 (CP)— Residents of the foothills area of Alberta don't even blink an eyelash when rain descends in "sheets" similar to Hollywood it's "stupendous".

Cameraman John Boyle, Rimming Eagle-Lion's "Northwest Stampede" set a much earlier pace, braved the elements during a combined wind and rain storm to record a brief bit of colored film of the phenomenon.

The look of the picture may be Mexico or China but next time you see horizontal rain on the screen you'll know it's Alberta.

MACHINISTS' BOILS

Machinists whose hands and arms are much exposed to cutting fluids and metal particles frequently suffer with festers and boils, particularly over half of the forearm in the given plant being so affected. Of course the chief cause is infection from the man to man, either through personal contact or by the spreading of the cutting oil or cutting mixture.

Precautions provided in some plants to sterilize the oil and cutting mixture have greatly reduced the prevalence of boils as well as other plants such installations have given little trouble.

Minute particles of metal in the cutting mixture have been considered responsible for minute abrasions of the skin of hands and arms, through which the pus producing germs contributed by boils or festers on the hands of a few workers gain entrance and set up boils or festers on the left forearm of the machinist. Attempts have been made to remove these metallic particles by magnets, but without much benefit.

An application of the pus producing germs should be performed to ward off the tincture of iodine and covered with a protective dressing of some kind, to prevent festering and suppuration.

On coming to work morning and afternoon, men should be required to scrub the hands and arms thoroughly with soap and water and a soft soap or liquid soap and then thoroughly dried, after washing the skin thoroughly with a clean towel, but no soap containing or lanolin and caster oil mixed. This is a fairly good protection for the skin against the drying effect of the cutting mixture and lubricating oils. Officers of the United States public health service Washington, D.C., investigated this trouble in a number of plants and found that when some such routine care and practice was followed, under strict inspection of foremen, the incidence of boils and festers disappeared in a number of plants, and was cut down in thirty work.

Men who get such boils or festers on the hips and thighs should wear aprons impervious to the oil. The drying effect of lubricating oil upon the skin is well known to every workman who handles oil much. The careful washing of the skin, and a rubbing in of some health creams, is of benefit to oil (equal parts) before each work period affords considerable protection and keeps the skin in a better condition.

What effect has radium treatment on fibroid tumors?—M.G.H.

Answer—In most cases it causes gradual shrinking of the tumors, stops the bleeding and brings about a practical cure.

More Than 220 Cases of Polio This Year

(By The Canadian Press)

Poliomyelitis, the dread disease known generally as infantile paralysis, has counted more than 220 victims across the Dominion in the first seven months of this year, a survey by The Canadian Press shows today. Only three deaths have occurred to date, all of them in the prairies.

Hardest hit this year Western Canada with 169 cases, while Ontario and the east reported 32. British Columbia's total of 91, Manitoba's 30 and Ontario's 32 show a decreasing incidence of the disease from west to east. Exceptions to this pattern, however, are Saskatchewan with 20 cases and Alberta, with only eight.

Official figures for Quebec were not available, but authorities said yesterday there was no threat of an epidemic in the province this year. Montreal has recorded two cases.

New Brunswick has six and Nova Scotia seven, while Prince Edward Island, where a summer epidemic had already caused two deaths by this time last year — is so far polio - free.

British Columbia's total is an all-time high for that province. Vancouver alone reports 67 persons stricken compared with only one up to about 30 last year.

Two deaths have occurred so far this year in Manitoba — a boy and a girl, both 14 years old.

The third 1947 death was in Saskatchewan, where Regina has had nine cases and Moose Jaw two. There were four deaths in 38 cases in Saskatchewan during 1946.

In Ontario, Dr. J. T. Phair, deputy minister of health, yesterday said the general situation is more reassuring than last year. Of the 32 cases in the province this year 24 have been of the abortive type with no paralysis resulting.

In Hamilton nine polio cases are reported and in three of them evidence of paralysis has developed.

Chemical Blast Blamed in Fire At Mine Plant

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Aug. 2—(CP) — Explosion of a chemical known as D-Solit-X was blamed today for the $100,000 fire which destroyed the experimental plant of the Chromium Mining and Smelting Corporation yesterday.

Before being isolated by the quick action of firemen, the spectacular blaze threatened the Corporation's main plant and caused extensive damage to nearby homes and business establishments.

"It was impossible to put the fire out because of the chemical burns in water and all we could do was prevent the fire from spreading," said Fire Chief W.J. Phillips.

Several persons escaped injury and two were saved from possible death. Mrs. Wm Verboll, trapped in her apartment when flames roared around both exits, was rescued by her husband, and three-year-old Tommy Yukosevich, who tripped fleeing from the scene of the explosion, was carried to safety by two other playmates.

David Hill, one of the men working in the plant at the time escaped through a side door before the building was consumed in flames. "The heat was so terrific it was almost unbearable," Hill said.

DEPT. OF DEFENCE

The censors made their "worst blunder of the war" in rulings against newspapers carrying the statement opposing National Registration for which Meyer Camillien Houde of Montreal was interned. "It was the duty of the censors to wait until newspapers submitted the story and then merely refuse to give it a legal clearance. By warning newspapers off, the censors were in effect usurping the functions of the court".

The Drew letter of July 11, 1943 labelled as "directly contrary to the evidence as a whole" the finding of Sir Lyman Duff on Lt.-Col. George Drew's assertion that troops sent to Hong Kong were ill trained and their dispatch mismanaged. Col. Drew now is premier of Ontario.

The censors would not approve publication of any part of the letter. "Throughout the censors were consistent—but they showed the effect of cabinet domination as clearly as in the Houde case. No appreciable degree of security or national unity in either case justified the decision against publication—had the newspapers been insistent on publishing the letter—and done so—it is questionable that prosecution would have ensued." Hansen Report involved

A report of a statement made by R. B. Ranger, then Federal Conservative leader, at Charlottetown, Oct. 11, 1940, on an impending movement of British air training students to Canada was involved in the third case reviewed. The report was first released, killed 17 minutes later and then approved for publication within 14 minutes.

"Open charges were made that the story was reinstated in order to embarrass the Conservative leader, who five months earlier had taken over the leadership of the party, decimated in the March elections. It is just as likely that a difference of opinion between the censors and air force security resulted in the off-again, on-again attitude."

The mass break of more than 100 home-defence troops at Queen's Barracks, London, Ont., came in December, 1944, during the Grey North by-election and when submarines were active off Halifax. The censors ruled out the story because the reports could have given the enemy information that heavy troop movements overseas were in progress. The story was released Jan. 19 when the overseas movement was completed.

Two Points of View

Mr. Purcell writes it is impossible to state dogmatically whether politics on the cabinet level entered the case. On the one hand it was stated at the outset that the story would be released when the troop movement was complete—as was done. On the other hand it was argued that the defence department first wanted to hoist the story, even considering establishment of military censorship, and finally became convinced in mid-January that newspaper pressure made inevitable announcement when the troops arrived.

Liquor Firms Allowed To Do Some Advertising

Toronto, Aug. 2 (CP) — Col. William Grslainger, Ontario Liquor Commissioner, said yesterday that liquor companies are being granted permission to do some advertising now that the Federal government's measure has been allowed to expire. This war measure permitted "institutional educational advertising" by beverage liquor manufacturers.

The commissioner said that under the Ontario Liquor Control Act, the chief commissioner can permit advertising for "the time being."

His statement follow a letter sent by Rev. Dr. J. R. Mutchmor, secretary of the Board of Evangelism and Social Service of the United Church to all Presbyteries of his church. The letter charged that Attorney-General Leslie Blackwell "is failing to enforce the Ontario Liquor Act against advertising" in reply, Mr. Blackwell said the liquor advertising angle doesn't come under his department.

Favor Showing Of Painting Of 'Reclining Nude'

Toronto, Aug. 2 (CP) — The "Reclining Nude," a Matthew Smith painting of a robust lady in an advanced stage of undress, and lounging against a mantelpiece on a couch, might be hung in the art exhibit of this year's Canadian National Exhibition, despite the recent inference that it is "too intimate" for public display.

Elwood Hughes, general manager of the show, said today he would be "quite interested" in bringing the painting here for his big show. "I'm told it's a very fine piece of work," he said.

The painting is owned by Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey and was refused gallery space in Regina's recent Provincial Exhibition to spare from possible shock the sensibilities of the western folk.

The picture shows a nude come here it will certainly be hung," A. J. Key, director of Calgary's Allied Arts Centre, said today in commenting on the decision of Regina fair directors not to show "Reclining Nude" a picture by the English painter Matthew Smith. The picture is part of a collection of English paintings owned by Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey and now on loan to the Regina Exhibition.

"We are not afraid to show anything nude," stated Mr. Key. "In fact we have one hanging on the wall at the present time."

Referring to the opinion of one Regina director that the painting of a nude woman reclining on a couch was "too intimate, Mr. Key said, "I'm quite sure what is meant 'by that'. In his opinion there was nothing objectionable about the picture and the decision to withdraw it from the exhibit was "just as much nonsense."

"If the painting is acceptable to the National Gallery it should be acceptable to any other gallery," Mr. Key added.

Shake Hands With Friends, Then Plunges To Death

New York, Aug. 2 —(AP)— After shaking hands with partying police said, that "this is the last time I'll be doing that," and John William Frick, 27, of Redwood City, Calif., plunged to his death last night from the fashionable Starlight Roof restaurant at the Hotel Waldorf Astoria.

Frick's body landed on the Park Avenue sidewalk 25 floors below. Police listed the death as suicide. Frick had been dining with friends in the restaurant and police quoted them as saying he had been drinked throughout the evening.

After leaving the dance floor, Frick escorted his partner back to the table, shook hands with other members of the group and walked away.

Three waiters, detectives reported, said they saw him walk to the three-foot parapet overlooking Park Avenue, place a chair against it and then dive over.

Favor Showing Of Painting Of 'Reclining Nude'

Toronto, Aug. 2 (CP) — The "Reclining Nude," a Matthew Smith painting of a robust lady in an advanced stage of undress, and lounging against a mantelpiece on a couch, might be hung in the art exhibit of this year's Canadian National Exhibition, despite the recent inference that it is "too intimate" for public display.

Elwood Hughes, general manager of the show, said today he would be "quite interested" in bringing the painting here for his big show. "I'm told it's a very fine piece of work," he said.

The painting is owned by Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey and was refused gallery space in Regina's recent Provincial Exhibition to spare from possible shock the sensibilities of the western folk.

The picture shows a nude come here it will certainly be hung," A. J. Key, director of Calgary's Allied Arts Centre, said today in commenting on the decision of Regina fair directors not to show "Reclining Nude" a picture by the English painter Matthew Smith. The picture is part of a collection of English paintings owned by Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey and now on loan to the Regina Exhibition.

"We are not afraid to show anything nude," stated Mr. Key. "In fact we have one hanging on the wall at the present time."

Dead-Eye Wives Dominion's Ace Rifle Marksmen

Montreal, (CP) — Canada's feminine sharpshooters for years have had to buck popular opinion that shooting was "unfeminine". But few persons are brash enough to hurl such a statement their way today.

"Getting a few sister s couple of evenings a week so I can go shooting with my husband is quite a problem," said pretty Rosella M. Coe of Edmonton, Dominion rifle association expert shield winner.

Like most women target rifle enthusiasts, Mrs. Coe started shooting because of her husband's participation.

"I'm not particularly the outdoor type, and don't think game s I dislike shooting living things."

A native of Lethbridge, Alta., Mrs. Coe is Savage, Bi-year-old brunette, won the Dominion record of the Canadian Small Bore Rifle Association, Calgary's million outdoor championship in 1945.

"I think every good Canadian man, woman and child should know how to handle firearms safely," she said.

Mrs. R. S. Rice of Montreal, has been shooting for only three years, but recent Montreal and now the Dominion Ladies' outdoor championship in rifle matches, the Dominion ladies' indoor championship last winter, and one cup she was awarded last year for the lilac highest average for Canadian rifle matches in Quebec.

Aetiology of Wine

Mrs. Gordon Barnes, 25, a slim blond blonde, is a native of Wyoming, Ont. Although she has taken part in rifle matches since 1943, she has a list of C.S.R.A. and Dominion Marksmen wins which read like an anthology of current matches.

Mrs. Coe's boys and girls in marksmanship is the special interest of Lorelie Lockhart of Winnipeg. "I would like to see nothing better than a large junior shooting club in every major Canadian city."

Helen Ramsay of Edmonton, is continuity editor for a radio station, but attributes her original interest, in shooting to her bed tuck at bowling. Continuity moor and rifle alley irked her so much she swapped sports for the rifle range and the bull's eye ever since.

Mrs. Arthur Bethey Spencer of Vancouver, first big-bore, and a report of her wins would fill a book.

She started shooting in 1931, won the Lady Aberdeen Trophy in 1933 and the Weller Trophy in Victoria, B.C., the same year. In 1936 she made rifle history by taking the blue-ribbon event in the B.C. provincial matches, and next year netted a place on the provincial team sent to the annual Ottawa shoot. She attended Bisley again in 1938 and in the all-comers aggregate, placed sixth out of 1,000 contenders. Of the 20 men sent Canada she was beaten by only one—and by one point only.

Like most of Canada's woman sharpshooters, she has children—two to be exact.

Frozen Desserts

Before taking the knitting or mending to the cool verandah, leaving for the golf club, an afternoon with the bridge fans, or a shopping tour, it is an easy matter to prepare a dessert mixture and let it freeze in the refrigerator freezing tray. There is no doubt of a welcome from the family, even if it is a few minutes late when mother gets home, if they know that there is ice cream. To the children, ice cream means fun, and if it is not enriched with cream, means ice cream.

To the children, ice cream means fun, and if it is not enriched with cream, means ice cream.

Like most women, inexpensive, and convenient to serve frozen desserts deserve the great popularity they have in our menus today. Made in the home, they can be smooth and creamy in texture, and delicious in flavor. Nothing is more satisfying and refreshing on a warm summer night.

Miss Irene Kennedy, of the Consumer Section, Dominion Department of Agriculture, recommend their favorite basic ice cream recipe which means true flavor change in the flavoring or the addition of fresh fruit. Canned fruit but fresh desserts is prepared by folding three quarters of a cup of fruit into a half a pint of cream after it has been whipped. Strawberry, apricot, peach or plum jams are pushed red. No stirring is required during freezing in the refrigerator tray, so without any fuss the dessert is ready when guests arrive.

Basic Recipe For Ice Cream

2 cups milk
2 tablespoons flour
1-3 cup sugar
1-4 teaspoon salt
2 egg yolks
1-3 teaspoons vanilla
2 egg whites
2 tablespoons sugar

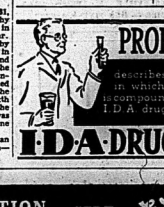
Scald milk in top of double boiler. Blend together the flour, sugar and salt. Gradually add scalded milk stirring constantly until mixture thickens. Cook 10 minutes after thickening. Blend a few spoonfuls of the hot mixture with the beaten egg yolks and return to first mixture. Cook 2-3 minutes longer. Pour into refrigerator tray and freeze to a mush. Empty into a bowl, beat slightly, add vanilla and fold in egg whites, which have been beaten with two tablespoons sugar until stiff. Pour into freezing tray and freeze with temperature control set at coldest point until firm 2-3 hours. Stir mixture with a fork two or three times during the freezing period to give a smooth consistency. Six servings.

Mapleine Mint Ice Cream

2 cups coarse cream
2 teaspoons corn starch
2 egg yolks
1-4 cup molasses
1-8 teaspoon salt
2 egg whites
1-4 cup sugar
Few drops peppermint

Heat 1 1-2 cups cream in double boiler, mix cornstarch with 1-4 cup cold cream stir into hot cream and stir until mixture thickens. Add molasses, pour over well beaten egg yolks and return to double boiler and cook until mixture coats the spoon. Cool. Add molasses and salt. Beat egg whites until stiff, add sugar, beating constantly until well blended. Fold into cold molasses mixture; add peppermint, pour into ice tray. Freeze to a mush. Turn into a chilled bowl and beat until smooth, return to tray. Freeze until firm. Six servings.

Berry Sherbert



2 eggs
1-2 cup sugar
1-2 cup light corn syrup
2 cups cereal cream
2 tablespoons milk
1 lemon
1-2 cup crushed berries
3 tablespoons sugar

Beat eggs until light and lemon colored. Add sugar, corn syrup to beat. Combine remaining ingredients except the berries and sugar; add to egg mixture. Freeze at low temperature in refrigerator tray until just firm. Remove from tray, whip until light and add crushed berries to which sugar has been added. Pour the mixture back into freezing tray and freeze until firm, about three hours. Garnish with whole berries. Any fresh berries may be used. . . Raspberries and blueberries are especially good. Six servings.

Absence of Fear Among Wildlife Noted During Solunar Periods

By JOHN ALDEN KNIGHT
Noted Sportsman, Author and Creator of Solunar Tables

All wildlife, as we know, responds to primary, natural instincts in the conduct of its daily affairs. These instincts or resolutions assume a definite pattern. Survival of the fittest is at all ways the best rule. The weak perish while the strong survive. Only in that way can any breed of wildlife be at the peak of perfection.

Of all of the emotions of wildlife, perhaps fear is the most compelling. Most of the time, fear-ruption, the will to survive—call it what you will—is the uppermost thought in the mind of any wild creature. On occasion, this instinct is overridden by other conditions such as hunger, the mating urge or anger, but these are the exceptions that prove the rule. Mostly, fear is the impulse which prompts the daily behavior of the creatures of the wild.

One of the outstanding characteristics of the response to the promptings of a Solunar Period on the part of wildlife is the temporary diminishing of fear. Hungry prey plays its part in causing wild creatures to cast caution to the winds and doesn't seem to be quite half as common to several creatures roaming about evidently with no thought of food.

Let's consider some concrete instances. An adult brown trout, when he selects a home for the spring and summer months, takes up a position in the stream where he is protected by his natural enemies, gets often as not this resting shelter in the vicinity of his food supply. But it is safe to say that the trout very rarely ventures from cover in search of food when feeding time comes, our brown trout has learned from experience what parts of the stream contain the most food and he selects his feeding stations in one of two advantageous spots. Not infrequently these feeding stations are in water that is comparatively shallow. Many times, during Solunar Periods, I have seen brown trout move up into the shallow, well above their regular feeding stations, until there is barely enough water to cover them. There they stay for an hour or so, completely exposed to their natural enemies. They may or they may not be feeding but the fact remains that they seem to be devoid of all sense of caution. At least for the time being. When the Solunar Period ends, to an end, they retire to their resting stations and the slightest indication of danger will put them to flight.

Meanwhile, in the same riffles where these trout are feeding an interesting reaction is taking place. The larvae of stream-bottom insects—the nymphs—spend the large majority of their time underneath the rocks and pebbles of the fast-water section of a stream. There they are safe from their enemies—when a Solunar Period arrives. It is not uncommon to see these same larvae ambling about in a leisurely fashion on top of the rocks, pebbles of comparatively unsuitable. Crayfish and helgrammites come out of their hiding places and move about in plain sight. This sort of thing goes on for an hour or so, but when the Solunar Period draws to a close these small creatures disappear, once again hiding in the security of the rocky crevices of the stream bottom.

Most of the time bass rise to a surface lure reluctantly. When a Solunar Period is not in progress, they strike a surface lure with what we call a "smash rise." This is a hurried affair, with much splash and flying spray because of the fact that nature tells the bass not to go in for needless exposure to danger. Thus, Mr. Bass makes a fast trip and the splash is made when he turns quickly to get back to his resting station. During Solunar Periods the bass come more readily to surface lures. The rise is less hurried and the lure is taken deliberately in concentration to see schools of large bass cruising about, taking time, in quite shallow water. There they are apt to strike at most anything that moves and looks even remotely edible. At the close of the activity period, these cruisers return to deep water and they can be taken only with carefully fished, deep-running lures of live bait.

Muskellunge follow the same general pattern of behavior. These fish aren't much afraid of anything as they have few natural enemies and, as one well knows, they live in shallow water. But they are temperamental creatures, and they move and feed when they happen to feel like it. During the rest periods they will ignore your very existence. Well into a Solunar Period definitely does stimulate these fish to hunger and activity. Better fish, when you are fishing musky water keep close track of your Solunar Period lods so that they are not wasted.

And so it goes, straight across the board. Make it a point to slip your weekly Solunar Tables and your fishing gear in your tackle box. When the fishing season comes to a close, you will find that you have enjoyed better fishing than if you merely trusted to luck.

Attlee's Recreations Tennis and Golf Says 'Who's Who'

London, Aug. 2 (AP). — New edition of "Who's Who" issued today listed Prime Minister Attlee's recreations as tennis and golf. The Maharajah of Bikaner said his hobby is polo and golf.

Each of the 34,616 notables in the book was invited to give his recreations.

Novelist Compton Mackenzie listed himself as president of the Siamese Cat Club. Poet Laureate John Masefield listed "listening to music and silence." Hugh Heckstall-Smith said he enjoyed "thinking of things to come."

Bernard Shaw last year said his hobbies were "anything but sport." This year: "Being 90." He was 91 last week.

Hugh L. Keenleyside, former Canadian Ambassador to Mexico, confessed himself fond of poker, and the writer Christopher Morley, one of the comparatively few Americans listed, wrote promptly among his after-hours interests: "Whisky and water".

What's Doing in Sport

A Scanton, Pa., golfer has been fined on an assault and battery charge after his golf ball struck a 12-year-old caddy causing the loss of the boy's right eye.

Detective James McDonald said John Fanning, the caddy, was retrieving some golf balls when struck by a ball driven by R. J. Lestrange.

Harry Bradshaw of Kilcroney won the Irish professional golf championship for the fifth time with an aggregate of 291 for 72 holes at the County Louth, Thursday. He thus equalled the record of the late Michael Moore, who won the title five times in succession, ending in the First World War. Bradshaw also broke the course record with a fourth round score of 70.

A large number of local and United States entries have been received for the 25th anniversary meet of the Goderich Racing and Hunting Association next Monday. The new "Clime" starting gate is to be used for the first time on a Goderich track at the meet.

The open season on duck hunting in the United States has been cut to 30 days in the East and 35 days in the Central and Western States, in an effort to conserve the country's fast-declining fowl population. Last year the average open season was 45 days and in 1945 it was 80. The daily bag limit this year is four, compared to seven last year and 10 in 1945.

Newest arrival in the camp of Montreal's Alouettes of the International Rugby Football Union is a colossal American star. He is Reuben (Rube) Juster, a six-foot-four, 240-pound middle wing who won the Western Conference all-star tackle rating with the University of Minnesota and then moved on to the world's professional champion Chicago Bears. Rube signed with the club as player and line coach.

By GEORGE H. CARVER, Sports Editor.

Civic Holiday is on deck and with it comes a rather extensive sports schedule with plenty of variety for Mr. and Mrs. Fan to choose from. Baseball fans have two hopes: will hike to the various parks and forward spots while others will do a spot of motoring or camping over the long weekend; in the case of almost everybody plans but father seems likely is a number of that much-maligned typewriter-tickling fraternity, the sports writers.

For the baseball-minded there is a neat tidbit scheduled for the Fair Grounds at 10.30 a.m. of Sidesk Monday twilighting when the strong Peterborough Maracles tangle with the Trenton Flyers in an exhibition baseball encounter, at which the Kinsmen Club hope will swell to a considerable attendance to encourage new recruiting in the Community Softball Park. Fans who cannot who missed the floodlight game in Wednesday night will get an opportunity to see baseball played under the arcs as this event will see the lights on during the latter part of the game. And as a dessert, if the Fran is in terpsichorean mood, hop across the street to the dance chumba or litter the ole dogs at the Club Commodore where Rud Hinkson and his merry melets of the Commodores Orchestra will hold forth, with the nickels, dimes and folding money going to the same worthy cause.

For the muzzhad Mikes and Marys, there's a Belleville Softball Association game being played at Point Anne where the Herby Rennie ranched C.N.R. Veterans are taking Sedove's Point Anne Leafs on the first of a two game series for the right to represent the association in the intermediate "A" playdowns. Should be a corker as both of the joust as the chips are down and the boys in the best room are pacing their pony of injuree on both teams. It should be a close series and it wouldn't surprise us to see it go the limit. Second game here Wednesday night.

Lovers of the helmeted hellions who skim over the water between 50 and seventy miles an hour in chydroplanes and runabouts can safely put sports fill at Picton where the annual regatta gets under way at one o'clock. According to our Municipal Guide the entire number of the top-flight speed boys will be present and he pilotmates rubbing elbows that Gil Lombardo will be on hand to test his 1947 Miss Canada for best the craft have to offer. Next week Guy defends his Gold Cup which he snatched from Detroit last year.

Other speed addicts, those who prefer their sports menu on dry land can trek to Brighton if they so desire when the roaring motorbike buckaroos are staging a series of races. Plenty of excitement promised and likely a spill and a thrill a minute.

An event which no doubt will be doubly welcome to Belleville fans is the stadium here scheduled for the second Canadian Legion boxing show scheduled for the Memorial Arena next Wednesday night. Highlighting a card that scintillates with stars of the district boxing fraternity will be a return match between Tommy Emerson Charles, Belleville colored lad, and Glen Dafoe, pride of Trenton's leather-pushing addicts. Dafoe won the Bruce Walker Trophy at the recent Hastings and Prince Edward Golden Gloves championships and the decision handed down was popular as a Tommy Atkins at an Irgun binge.

And the faithful didn't pull their verbal punches when the referee waved the Dafoe flipper aloft in token of victory. So unpopular was the decision that Legion boxing authorities immediately got in touch with the referee and the result is a return match which will be the main bout on Wednesday's card. Seven other bouts round out an attractive bill and the district Canadian Legions will be present to heave leather and whatnot at the opposition.

And while on the subject, there is an agitation down Montreal way among the city's boxing fandom to have the decisions of individual fistics announced after each fight. This system is carried out in New York rings and has proved popular. We are in agreement with the idea. If the decision is good, let the judges get the credit, and if it's bad the crowd will know where to place the blame.

The district golf tournament at the Cataraqui Golf and Country Club will get under way tomorrow (Sunday) with plenty of entries from all parts of the district. The first official tee off at 9:30 a.m. Representing the Belleville Golf Club entries are Tommy Carruthers and H. Ridley. The latter pair, after a long lead, Humber Valley, and J. H. Peacock, Weston, and go into action at 1:07 p.m.

The knothole gang had a field day at the floodlight game on Wednesday night when it was decided that swgards of three hundred youthful sleepthirsters went over the jumps to get a free look at the pro teams in action. From where we sat, we had a clear vision of one vulnerable point, and when a base ball-hungry mob of muppets charged the broadway made the Pied Piper look like a lone wolf. One audacious grimyfaced urchin climbed from into the Waterdown dugout when the score was engaged in pre-game practice, helped himself to an expensive ball and made good his escape as well on his way to freedom when the strong arm of Manager Bob Shaver gave chase and set out. "Now be a good boy, son," genially admonished the grey-thatched Waterdown mentor. "After all we are trying to provide for this game." The youngster, not the least abashed, grinned amusingly and retorted forward the Ace urn back to try his luck there.

The softball squad of the Belleville branch of the Canadian Legion went down to a pulsating defeat at the hands of the Peterborough Legionnaires in the Liftlock City on Thursday night by a 22-21 score. The game played before 800 fans was never in doubt and the starry Petes veterans ran wild with the blokers after our prides had shoved three runs across in the first chukker. They hit six Pete hurlers for 20 runs on the lineup including the home-run clouting Mountain-tain guns and the artillery. Retain guns and the artillery. Return match will be played here on Saturday, Aug. 9 in the Exhibition Grounds at 3:30 p.m.

LITTLE GIANTS CONTINUE MARCH TO TOP SPOT

Gradually Creeping Up on League - Leading Royals and Now Only 5½ Games Behind

(By The Associated Press)

Jersey City Giants are continuing their steady march toward first place in the International League and today they trail Montreal's hot-and-cold league leaders by only 5 1-2 games.

Although held to three hits by Roy Hochlin, the Giants, eked out a 1-0 victory over Rochester Red Wings last night while the Royals dropped a 4-3 decision to Newark Bears.

Lefty Jack Kraus limited the Wings to five safeties and scored the lone run of the game in the eighth after George Nyati flew out.

The Royals, who at one stage appeared headed for another runaway pennant victory, suffered their third setback in four outings.

Home runs by Dick Whiteman and Roy Campanella highlighted a three-run Monti 4 fourth inning but the Bears struck back with two in the same frame, one in the sixth and shoved the winning run home in the ninth when Jack Phillips singled with the bases loaded.

Meanwhile, Hank Sauer, fence buster of Syracuse's third-place Chiefs, clouted his 42nd homer of the season with the bases loaded during a six-run, eight-inning rally to enable to Chiefs to trounce the Toronto Maple Leafs 7-1.

Alex Mustakis, recently obtained by the Chiefs from Newark, handcuffed the Leafs on three blows in his second start of the season.

Baltimore Orioles split a doubleheader with the Buffalo Bisons, winning the opener 3-1 as Ray Poat gave up three hits and fanned 12. The Bisons took the nightcap 8-2 with Don Kerr and Clem Hausmann holding the Orioles to five hits while the Bisons collected 12 including a single, double and homer by Earl Rapp who drave home four runs.

HANK SAUER TOPS INT. LOOP HITTERS

Slams Three Homers to Increase Pace-Setting Output to 41; Newark's Clark in Second Place

New York, Aug. 2 (AP)—Hank Sauer, powerhouse of Syracuse Chiefs, continued to lead the International League last week in batting, homers, runs batted in and runs scored.

Although his average dropped from .354 to .346, Sauer enjoyed a comfortable 17-point margin over Newark's Al Clark, who moved from third to second place in the batting derby during the span which included games on Wednesday.

The lanky Chief outfielder slammed three homers during the week to increase his pace-setting output to 14, 2½ socked his 42nd round-tripper with the bases full yesterday, but this is not included in present figures.

Clark, who led the loop in hits, 129 and doubles, 23 was only two points ahead of Sauer's outfield mate, Dusty Mele, in the batting race.

Trailing Mele's .329 mark were Pep Young, Rochester, .321; Earl Naylor, Montreal, .317; Dick Whitman, Montreal and Nippy Jones, Rochester, .316; Jim Wasdell, Buffalo, .315; Soup Campbell, Baltimore, .314 and Earl Rapp, Buffalo, .307.

Young topped the field in three-bagger production with nine and Butch Woyt of Montreal led the parade in steals 27.

Ed Heusser, veteran Montreal righthander, continued to set the pace for mound honors with a 13-1 won-lost record for a .929 percentage. Young Jack Banta of the Royals led in strikeouts, 124 and shutouts, six and Jim Prendergast was tops in victories, 14 and walks, 315.

'Referees Are Dumb', Groans Kenneth After Losing Limit Decision to Palermo Panther

Crowd Howls Its Disapproval When Referee Ernie Powers Awards Katan the Bout

"I was given the business by a referee that can't tell the difference between wrestling and boxing," quoth Ken Kenneth, the windmill wrestler from the Antipodes after his defeat at the hands of John K'atan last evening in the main bout at the arena.

"You were within three marks of a draw," retorted referee Ernie Powers, "and John defeated you on points. He had you pinned with your own hold several times in the last fall."

Ken still figured that he had been given the wrong end of a decision. "I sat on Katan for three quarters of the final fall," he stormed.

In the opening few minutes of the bout both wrestlers were extremely cautious and gentlemanly. They broke cleanly several times in succession and the crowd applauded the sportsmanlike gestures of both. Then the Palermo Panther opened up on Kenneth with a series of head locks and stomach punches that forced the New Zealand wrestler to his knees. He rallied somewhat and caught Katan with an elbow smash that sent "fingers" spinning. Ken then applied an assortment of head locks and arm locks that punished Katan severely.

John returned to the fray with his famous finger work and proceeded to massage Kenneth's eyes to the great distress of the fans. Ken replied to these unsavory tactics with a Japanese arm stretch that threatened to dismember the Palermo Panther. Suffering acutely Katan managed to break this punishing hold, and setting the New Zealander's leg applied his standing corkscrew hold and pinning the worthy from down under in twenty minutes.

While the Palermo Panther retired to the dressing room a Kenneth fan hastened to the ringside to impart words of wisdom to his favorite. It must have been good advice because at the start of the second fall Kenneth rushed into Katan and applied the pressure constantly. Except for a very uncomfortable minutes when he was being hurt with arm and knee smashes to the kidney, Kenneth had the second fall all to himself. He seized the Katan mustache in various nooks and proceeded to twist it like a pretzel. Elbow smashes, arm twists, and the New Zealand special "leg of-mutton," hold subdued Katan in short time. The leg of mutton hold is one where the victim is rolled and tossed about the ring with the person applying the hold using his arm for a lever. The victim generally ends on the top of his head hitting the canvas at the conclusion of each roll.

Ken started the third fall with his windmill approach. Always on his move and dangerous at all times he twisted Katan's arm causing him to go to his knees. Katan broke out of this hold by attempting to remove a large portion of Ken's hair. Then John applied a scissor grip that threatened to end the match. Referee Powers broke the hold when he noticed Katan using the ropes for a support.

Ken applied his leg of mutton hold once again and it looked the end of Katan's bid for a shot at the British Empire title. John exerted every ounce of pressure and reversed the hold on Kenneth. This see-saw battle of holds continued until the bell ended the match at the end of the sixty minute time limit.

Referee Powers awarded the decision to Katan on points and the faithful swarmed around the ring in protest. Catcalls ushered Powers the showers and cheers resounded for the defeated Kenneth. Kenneth felt that he was the victim of a Canadian conspiracy and quite vocal about it.

"All Katan said was, "I thought I had the edge." Powers thought so too which made the decision unanimous.

Some of Canada's leading marksmen today are competing at the Long Branch rifle ranges near Toronto in the Ontario Rifle Association meet, after a wartime-enforced lapse of seven years. More than 200 entries are lined up for the shoots, which are preliminary matches to the Dominion event at Ottawa starting August 11. Champions of all the Capital City matches will qualify for the famous Bisley meet in England next July.

Majority of the entrants are from Hamilton, Guelph, Toronto and London.

Eight golfers enter today into the third day of the Northern Ontario Amateur Golf Championship play at Timmins. The field is led by Bill Paul of Timmins, who yesterday defeated Merv Stoughton of North Bay on the 19th. They had finished 18 holes of match play all even. J. Krisk, also of Timmins, went to 20 holes with M. Degruchy, a fellow townsman, on a tie.

St. Paul, Minnesota, open golf tournament is topped so far by the performance of Fred Haas Jr. New Orleans. He collected a six-under par 66 yesterday for a 36-hole total of 135. Right behind Haas came Lew Worsham, Pittsburgh, and Jim Ferrier of Chicago who scored 67's for 36-hole totals of 136. Glenn Teal of Jacksonville, Fla., was one stroke behind.

Czechoslovakia's Davis Cup Tennis team, winner of the European zone, is due in Montreal August 9 or 8 for the Inter-zone final match Aug. 11-16 against the winner of next week's Australia-Canada matches.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

New York, Aug. 2. (AP)—The best rookie first baseman in the baseball organization, says one observer who should know something about both the Yanks and Rookies, is Newark's Joe Collins.

That's an interesting point because George McQuinn isn't likely to have another season like his one with the Yanks . . . Collins was optioned out to Birmingham and hit .366. Since rejoining the Bears he's been batting .350.

Quote, Unquote

Two-sentence boxing lesson from Benny Ross during the Lesnevich-Maurielle fuss: "When you get a guy hurt, you got to hit him in the body. That's when you got to bring his hands down." . . . Further comment from fight manager Chris Dundee: "Maurielle has no condition. He tries to do in five weeks what he should take the whole year to do."

The University of Texas has just completed plans for a 66,000 capacity stadium that will be second only to the Sugar Bowl in the South. It's supposed to be ready for the 1948 football season. . . So many Latin-American sightseers have visited the Hialeah race track this season that signs now are posted in Spanish and English . . . The Cubs claim that Boston's Johnny Sain is the toughest pitcher in the National League at Wrigley Field because of the way he brings his overhand curve out of that white shirt background. He says Yes . . .

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Ribber

Man needs but little here below to play a good game of bridge, kids fib what he has in excess of expected. His order of choice in bids is T-A-N; takeout, assist, notrump.

Two signals for ordering partner to bid must be a pair of his equipment. One is: A takeout to a new suit is forcing for one round. The other is: A jump is forcing until game is reached.

Pick up this hand:

♥ A K 7 4 3
♣ K 6

Your opening bid with this hand is one heart. This tells your partner that you have better than average in high cards, sure tricks, hearts. Also that you have at least five tricks.

If partner responds with one spade, he says: "If I had no more than two tricks, I would have passed. So, you know I have more than two tricks. And my spade suit is biddable, of course.

His spade bid is a takeout to a new suit. So, it is forcing for one round. Therefore, you must bid again. The fact that you have no desire to bid again does not excuse you. You must obey the order.

Being required to bid by the signal, what will be your bid?

Simply follow the order of choice in T-A-N. Look first for a takeout. With none, look for an assist. With none, bid no-tjump.

You have now fulfilled your obligation to keep the bidding open for one round. Are you likely to bid again? Only if you are forced by a signal. Then you must.

Forcing signals are not unreasonable. A takeout is the first in a choice of three types of bids. A takeouter may have an assist or a no-trump bid he would like to show. He should be given the chance.

A player who jumps announces that he sees tricks enough to help make a game. Therefore, partner should co-operate until game is reached.

In partners you trust or both may go bust.

GETS LARGE BASS

Mr. Jack Rosen, 203 Wellington Street, Kingston, landed a four-pound, twelve ounce small mouth black bass, off Milhaven last Wednesday. A minnow was used as bait and the bass jumped six times before being netted.

The Dreadful Night

By Kathleen Norris

CHAPTER 18

"Monty!" She made it sound surprised, thrilled, proud. But how little it mattered! It mattered! It would only make what must follow more dreadful for her and for him.

"Seems Pinky's letters were full of me," Monty exulted, "and Dan Murchison — that's the father, had me looked up, Christy, this means everything. Living down there and getting the taste of this dam war out of my mouth —lots of fun for you and the kid, and a chance to make myself absolutely indespensable to Interhemisphere Power. Here, jump out here, and I'll take the 'bus' round to the garage."

"I'll go 'round with you." She had often done this before, when they came back from trips long or short, as a little gesture of affection; he had never taken it for granted. But she had never seen quite such a flush of pleasure and gratitude as lighted his face now. "You— you silly!" she said a little thickly, with her old half-maternal smile.

"You — you — there's only one of you, Chris," Monty said a little hoarsely. He put his strong arms about her; she felt the infinite comfort and safety of them going through all her being like wine.

"I love you silly," she whispered, her cold cheek against his.

Silly perhaps, but it was all heaven for him, and might have been heaven for her. There were good fires going inthe almost unused fireplaces of the Blount house tonight; there were wonderful smells in the kitchen. Monty's mother gave Christy one of the glimpses she had so rarely, of a loved and human woman, mistress of her own home, rejoiced in the safe return of the son who was the light of her eyes.

Everywhere was comfort, light, voices full of happiness, all the miraculous, every day beauty of home living, nursery, kitchen broad stairs, wide hallways. And outside the dark snowy night augmented the security and warmth within, and the heavy plate windows reflected fire and lamplight rather than the piled cold whiteness of the garden and lawns.

As for Dean, Christy had to admit proudly, after Monty had carried the small girl up to bed that her wildest hopes for her daughter's behavior had been eclipsed by Dean's welcome for her father. Deliciously small and coquettish and rosy, night-gowned and slippered, Dean snuggled into Monty's arms. She showed him her mangled fur rabbit and her armless Pinochio. Monty kissed the top of her soft hair; all the way upstairs Dean tightened her arms about his neck when he carried her off to bed.

"She's the most ravishing kid I ever saw in my life," Monty said when he came down.

His wife and mother looked up to smile.

"She's a good child," said the grandmother briefly.

"No, but Chris—" Monty protested, beside her on the davenport, his arm about her shoulders "she wouldn't make up to any casual man like that!"

"Of course she wouldn't! She's been deeply indoctrinated with a love-my-own-Daddy virus. Mind you never let her down!—

"Let her down! My Lord. Can you think what the people on the boat to Rio will say when that little party struts around the deck?"

"We go by boat?"

"We go to New York, spend two or three months at the New Jersey plant and sail from there.

"Montgomery, it sounds like a dream," his mother said.

"It is a dream— come true, perhaps you think I won't like showing off my wife and kid. They say Rio is a lovely place Chris, swimming and palms and old churches. Lots of the time, we'll be up at Soa Teresa, which ought to be wonderful mountain climate. We'll have a sort of old palace, or chateau or something —you'll love it."

"Oh, I will love it!" Christy said fervently. "Oh, if we were only there, and this nightmare was over!" her soul said over and over again on a wail of despair.

"How about you coming down Mom?" It was the good-son-to-a-good-mother voice; no special heat in it, but loving just the same.

"Oh, someday, someday," his mother said serenely.

"After Gurney Hill, Rio," Christy murmured. The safety of the fireplace, the grip of Monty's big arm, had lulled her for a second into forgetfullness.

"You are so damn' beautiful," Monty said.

"Monty," said his mother.

"Mom, some of the fellers used worse words than that, when the real excitement was on. Now f'rinstance—" Christy laughed softly in the curve of his arm; her fingers against his lips. Mrs. Blunt shook her head.

"Think of Dean," she reproved him.

"Well, but Chris is good-looking," he defended himself. "Girl' he added, "we're going to make up for three years. Do you— by any chance, love me?"

"Ah, Monty!" She looked at his mother and smiled, and to her consternation felt the tears coming and her throat thick.

"Better than la-di-dah?"

Christy felt a sudden check, a chill went through her vitals. I was all back again, the sickening weakness and helplessness and fear.

"You mean Lin Devereaux, I suppose?"

"If that's our friend with the long hands and the long wavy hair."

"Is it — —yes, of course it's long." She was trembling, and her hands felt cold.

"But he's an artist, is he?"

"He's — well, he goes with that artist set. Norman's the artist."

"Did he do you?"

"Oh, — sketches."

"She seemed to me just right for an artist's wife."

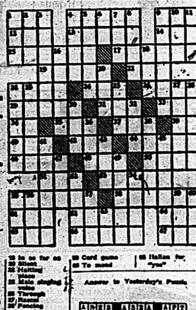
"Fairleigh? Yes, she is."

"Forty-ish?"

"Somewhere in there. He's lots older than she is. She was married to an Englishman, and divrced." Christy wondered why she was recounting this.

"When she met him, eh?"

"Well they were in love with each other for years."



"That's the impression I get, and now they can't get loose because of all that."

DRY IN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT

El Centro, Calif., Aug. 1 (AP) —You think you're dry?

Here in sunny Imperial County not one drop of rain fell in the first seven months of 1947.

Imperial irrigation district reported it the driest stretch since 1914.

Little Benny's Note Book

This morning at breakfist ma said to pop, William, on your way to the office, I wish you'd stop at Solders.

Meening the bakery, and pop said, Why should I. I dont know a sole in the place.

I'm having the bridge game here tomerrow, and I want you to order one of their special bannanna sooflay cakes, ma said. They'll only make them if you pay in advance, because they've had so many left on their hands she said, and pop said, I dont blame them. it doesn't sound like anything I'd want left on my hands.

And tonight at supper ma said, By the way, William, did you order my bannanna sooflay? Oh, that bannanna sooflay, pop said. There's quite a story connected with that, he said, and ma said, Now did you or didn't you for land sakes?

Well, it was like this, pop said. I got as far as Solders, and I looked in, and there wasn't a single customer inside, so I thought I'd hang around outside a while till somebody else went in, so I'd have a little company. Well sir, I cant tell you how many people went by that bakery as though they ferren't even aware of its existence. And believe me, some of them were odd caracters. There was one little man with a long red beard growing up on one side and down on the other. He was the oddest of all, pop said, and ma said, All rite, all rite, never mind the others. Just to relieve you from your pitiful transparent suffering, I'll tell you that the bridge game has been postponed, and I dont want the cake after all, so it's all for the best, fortunately, she said.

Yes gods, that's the last time I'll put myself in the position of forgetting to order you a bannanna sooflay cake, so please dont ask me again, pop said. Being the end of the subject after ma got through laffing.

Chicago Breaks Dodger Fans' Hearts by Ending Brooks Winning Streak at Thirteen

"Heartbreak" Week Sees End of Blackwell's 13-Game Pitching String and Gustine's Game-Hitting Streak

By JACK HAND
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Brooklyn's 13-game win spree is the latest casualty of baseball's "heartbreak week" which also saw the end of Cincinnati Lewis Blackwell's 16-game string and Pittsburgh Frank Gustine's 21 game hitting streak.

Add to these disappointments the collapse of Boston Red Sox, who went into a four-game losing tailspin after seven straight victories, and the end Monday of New York Giants' consecutive game home run streak at 15.

Although St. Louis Cardinals pulled out of their downward plunge by defeating Philadelphia Phillies last night 6-1 it might well be that the Red Birds' pennant hopes also died during the week in three straight defeats at the hands of the Dodgers.

Chicago played the villain in the "heartbreak" ending the Brooks' longest success story since 1924 with a 10-8 triumph engineered by catcher Clyde McCullough-two-run homer in the ninth inning.

Joe Stripp, an old Cub-tamer from way back with eight consecutive wins over Chicago to his credit in a two-year span, was treated and nearly finished when Hugh Casey threw the home run ball to McCullough to end a story afternoon.

Boston Loses Ground.

Dave Koslo was in superb form as he lathanded the Giants to a 2-1 edge over Pittsburgh, striking out Hank Greenberg three times.

Mel Ott lost his own game in the sixth when he yielded a double to Billy Rogers and later balked, permitting Rigney to score from third.

Dixon Dickson and Whitey Kurowski teamed up on the Phils to assure St. Louis of at least a 6-1 edge. Dickson allowed only five hits and singled home the winning run in the fifth. Kurowski homered off Schoolboy Rowe in the second and after he was dumped into the dirt by an inside pitch in the sixth, blasted Rowe's second delivery into the left field seats with Ray Mueh on Chuck Dlering on base.

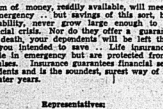
Boston got a ground in the race, splitting two with Cincinnati. Johnny Sain muzzled the Braves to a 4-2 edge in the opener with the help of Bob Elliott's two-run homer in the first inning. Another homer by Elliott with a man on failed to decide the finale which went to Cincy in 10 innings 3-2.

In the American League, after the Yankees had opened the door by bowing to Cleveland in a 9-7 game 4-3, Detroit Tigers knocked off the Red Sox 4-2 in which game 3-1.

Jim Hegan's triple and Eddie Bockman's outfield fly gave the Tribe the edge over New York's Joe Page in the opener, the Yanks threatened by loading the bases in the last of the ninth. Red Embree was credited with his 5th victory.

Freddie Hutchinson was the woeful story at Boston, holding the Red Sox to six hits and driving in all three Detroit runs with a sixth-inning triple with the bases full. Dave (Boo) Ferriss was the Boston hurler.

One bad inning, the eighth, when St. Louis scored twice, ruined Philadelphia's Dick Fowler of Toronto, who struck out eight men but bowed to the Browns' Bob Muncrief 4-1. Vern Stephens' single to left was the payoff blow, driving home Johnny Berardino and Paul Lehner.



Washington did some streak-smashing of its own, scoring its first home win of the year over Chicago 8-1, behind the seven-hit pitching of Early Wynn, who registered his 12th victory.

What Savings Plan Are You Using?

A small sum of money, readily available, will meet a minor financial emergency . . but savings of this sort, because of their availability, never grow large enough to meet a major financial crisis. Nor do they offer a guarantee that, in case of death, your dependents will be left the amount of money you intended to save . . Life insurance savings are available in emergency but are protected from "spend-thrift" impulses. Insurance guarantees financial security for your dependents and is the soundest, surest way of saving for your own later years.

FLYERS LOSE TO PETERBOROUGH IN CONGRESS GAME

Petes Bunch Hits to Win 6-2; Lefty Whitman Homers for Losers

Toronto, Aug. 2 (CP)—The solid-hitting Peterborough Petes pounded their way into the finals of the Toronto and District Baseball Congress playoffs by defeating the Toronto Flyers 6-2 here last night.

The Peterborough nine meets Toronto Riverdale Grads Saturday afternoon in an attempt to enter the finals.

Deserving every credit for the win, the Petes bunched their hits effectively. Right-hander Eddie Whitehill pitched stellar ball as he went the route, giving up but five hits, striking out seven and not passing a single man. Two opponent pitchers, Bob Wade and MacTaggart, allowed nine hits and two free tickets.

The Flyers seemed unable to fathom Whitehill's right-side slants to any great extent although he did serve up one home run ball in the fifth.

Petes lost no time in getting the scoring under way with a two-run effort in the first inning. Red Jubenville managed a double to centre when the fielder lost the ball momentarily in the early evening sun, then big Eddie Starr rapped out a long triple to score Jubenville. Tony Foley reached first via the fielder's choice route with Starr scoring on the play.

In the third, Fred Bidgood beat out a hit to short and stole second. Lee Burton was hit by the pitcher, then the left fielder bobbled Jack Mackmer's hit allowing Bidgood to take home. Howie Dalton singled in Mackmer.

The only Trenton scoring occurred in the fifth as Dick Patrick knocked out a single and Letty Whiteman homered, driving in the two runs.

The Flyers looked weak in the infield and catching. Petes managed to steal seven bases. Not a man was thrown out in a pilfering attempt.

Toronto Yacht Wins Trophy In Lake Race

Toronto, Aug. 3. (CP)—Bill Grant's White Mirage from the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, Toronto, won the Charles Freeman Cup in the 180-mile classic of the Lake Ontario Cruising Association Regatta. Grant's big cruiser chalked up a corrected time of little more than 19 hours, best of any of the 33 craft taking part in the race won last year by Col. Leroy Grant's Tramp Royal of the Kingston Yacht Club.

The 150-mile sailing race, which started off from Scotch Centre Island Thursday, was completed in the fastest times of the event's history. After the association had revised the time for Grant's cruiser, it was announced that for racing craft in the race, honors went to Bill Goodman's Quest, also of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, who finished in a little over 19 hours. Goodeham receives the Louis Freeman trophy.

The Matchett Cup, for the "M" Class boat finishing with the best time, was won by Shadow of the Rochester Yacht Club, skippered by Newt Castle. Times and points of other craft in the big race will be announced later today when the spot that M. L. Young of Clayton, N.Y., captured, will be made known. It was his yawl Alondra, that crossed the finish line first.

Shot to Death When He Grabs At Patrolman's Gun

Prentiss, Miss., Aug. 2 (AP) — Virginia Hartzog, sheriff's clerk, said last night that Verzie Johnson, Negro, charged with raping a white woman, was shot to death when he grabbed for a State Highway patrolman's gun.

She said a crowd gathered at the jail shortly after the Negro was arrested and "gave the sheriff until 8 o'clock tonight to get a confession."

Sheriff J. O. Berry, patrolman J. S. Puckett and a patrolman named Hopkins took the Negro to the scene of the crime, she said.

"He was telling them how it happened," she said, "and got up behind the sheriff's car and grabbed him around the waist and tried to get his gun." One of the three officers shot the Negro, she said.

Ohio Physician Found Slain

Portsmouth, O., Aug. 2 — (AP) —Dr. George Obrist, 45, prominent Portsmouth physician and surgeon, was found shot to death in the rear of his home here early today. Detective Chief John Smith said it appeared the shot had been fired from a long range.

The detective chief said that Dr. Obrist was killed by a 22-calibre bullet which struck back of the left ear and ranged into the skull.

The body was found by the physician's son, George Obrist Jr., 23, shortly after midnight. Young Obrist had driven his car into the garage and started toward the house when he saw his father lying in the yard at the foot of the back steps, Smith reported.

Police found no trace of a gun wielder.

The Movie Column

Better Think it Over Before Paying Visit to Hollywood

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, Aug. 2 (AP). — So you want to spend your vacation in Hollywood? Better think it over.

Licence plates from most states and provinces of North America can be found in Hollywood streets these warm days and the town is overflowing with tourists who date.

Hollywood and are surprised to find it looks not unlike Passaic. Except for some fancy health food and bizarre shops, it resembles any normal business district. The four corners of fabled Hollywood and Vine boast nothing a drug store, a bank, a restaurant and a department store.

Henry and his wife walk to Sunset Blvd. and ogle the radio studios. After a reasonable time they get tickets to an air show. But the program is Homer Gum-shoe, Detective — a summer replacement show; none of the big stars is on during the hot months.

The Klumps naturally want to see how movies are made. And they have a good chance. Every old Lodge brother is a prop man in one of the studios. But they are instructed that movie making requires silence and privacy, and they would have to be no less than Louis B. Mayer's godparents to get admission to a set.

So our visitors decide they would settle for the mere sight of a movie star. They buy a map and hike a tour of the stars' homes, but all of the occupants remain indoors. They eat at one of the swank restaurants and Henry becomes slightly ill when he receives the cheque. About the next stop on the tour of the cement Mecca is viewing the cement footprints of Grauman's Chinese Theatre.

But lest the picture appear too dismal, I should point out other sights readily available to the Klumps: Grauman's Chinese, the Mexican quarter at Olvera street, Farmer's Market, dining and dancing in restaurants, sunset strip shops, Lehres tar pits, the beaches, the Hollywood museum and Marie Wilson in "Blackouts".

MAYORS OF THREE JEWISH TOWNS ARRESTED

Dutch Intend To Maintain Law And Order in Indonesia

Apparently Want to Hang On To Rich Section of Empire

By STANLEY SWINTON

Batavia, Java, Aug. 5 — (AP)—Front line dispatches indicated tonight that both Dutch and Republican troops were respecting cease-fire orders in the Indonesian fighting zones.

The Dutch won control of 210 air miles of the north coast of Java by linking up their eastern and western forces a few hours before the cease-fire orders took effect last midnight, a dispatch from Semarang said.

The Dutch indicated officially that during attempts at mediation of their differences with the Indonesian Republic, they intended to maintain control of the rich areas wrested in the 15 days of fighting.

Appeal to Council.

S.O.B.S.I.E., the powerful Central-Republican trade union organization, appealed to the United Nations security council for a commission to supervise the observance of the truce. It called upon "workers and progressive people throughout the world to boycott Dutch troopships en route to The Netherlands East Indies." The organization also repeated the Indonesian demand that the Dutch return to demarcation lines which existed before the opening of hostilities on July 20.

However, Netherlands army and navy orders announced that Dutch forces would maintain "law and order" in the areas they now controlled.

An army order said future operations would be limited to the "maintenance of law and order" in Dutch-held regions of Java, Sumatra and Madoera, while an order of the day issued by Vice Admiral A. S. Pinke, commander-in-chief of The Netherlands navy in the East Indies, declared "it is up to (Dutch) forces to restore and maintain law and order" in those areas.

The two orders were issued only 12 hours after cease fire orders became effective at midnight last night and after Prime Minister Amir Sjarifoeddin of the Indonesian Republic declared that his government expected an international commission—which the Indonesians want appointed to supervise the United Nations Security Council's cease fire directive—to see that Dutch troops withdraw to the demarcation lines from which they jumped off July 20.

Neutral observers in Batavia foresaw a major political conflict over the issue of whether the Dutch will or will not—during mediation—be permitted to hang on to the areas they occupied. The Security Council last week rejected a Russian proposal which would have required Dutch forces to withdraw to their original positions.

Cease Fire Order Issued

The Indonesian's cease fire order, paralleling an earlier one by the Dutch, was issued by President Soekarno in a midnight radio broadcast.

Harris Jackson, Associated Press correspondent in Jogjakarta, the Indonesian capital, reported that "no one here expects actual fighting to stop immediately."

In Batavia, an armed patrol of Dutch military police, at 8 a.m., today, eight hours after the cease fire order became effective, seized the Indonesian-operated Batavia Central Civic hospital and turned it over to Dutch civic authorities. A Dutch official said the seizure was made because the staff permitted members of the Republican army to pose as patients to avoid arrest.

Both the Indonesians and the Dutch announced that their forces had been ordered to defend themselves, if attacked.

Sjarifoeddin last night declared that the republic no longer considers itself bound by the Linggadjati, or Cheribon, agreement—which provided for establishment of a United States of Indonesia as a partner in the Dutch Commonwealth.

Urges Sanctions Against Dutch

London, Aug. 5 — (AP)—Frederick Longden, Labor, said in the House of Commons today that Britain should "apply sanctions to prevent the Dutch from proceeding with this despicable aggression" in Indonesia.

Longden said that cease fire orders by both the Dutch and Indonesians did "not mean that trouble will be ended soon." He said he believed if Britain had intervened a month ago "the final aggressive attack — on the Indonesians would never have come about."

"Now," he said, "the Dutch have commandeered enough territory and strategic position that they can bargain just as they wish in spite of all the armistices and cease fires under the sun."

Christopher Mayhew, foreign under secretary, said Britain had made "constant efforts to mediate" the dispute and that Britain was "very glad to see that the Dutch have ordered a cease fire and we hope that a solution will be reached by the mediators."

FIFTEEN FAMILIES MADE HOMELESS IN COBALT FIRE

Loss Believed Between One and Two Hundred Thousand Dollars As 15 Buildings Lost

Cobalt, Aug. 5 — (CP) — A roaring fire which destroyed 15 frame buildings, left at least 15 families homeless and caused damage estimated at between $100,000 and $200,000 was a still-smoldering heap of ruins today as investigators poked cautiously among the debris seeking its cause.

The second great fire in this mining town's history, it broke out at 3:30 p. m. yesterday and by 4 p. m. six buildings were ablaze. By 5 p. m., when volunteer fire departments of nearby Haileybury and New Liskeard joined a provincial fire-ranging squad from Latchford, 20 miles away, in aiding the hard-pressed volunteer brigade, nearly three acres of the northern section of town were lost.

Two firemen were overcome but no one was injured.

Confused scenes recalling the roaring days of the silver rush of 45 years ago were enacted as more than 50 families were forced to the streets carrying such of their belongings as they could hastily snatch up. The narrow streets streamed with refugees as volunteer fire-fighters doused walls to prevent further spread of the flames and nearby residents stood on house tops soaking their shingled roofs with garden hoses or hastily-passed-up buckets of water.

Water Pressure Dwindles

In the midst of the confusion the town's water pressure dwindled and the fire brigades were forced to pump water from nearby Bass Lake. The damage recalled the holocaust of 1909, six years after Cobalt's founding as a silver centre, when a fire swept through a downtown street, destroyed 150 buildings, killed two persons and caused loss of more than $300,000. Three thousand persons were driven from their homes and lived in tents or homes of friends.

Friends again were called upon to house the homeless last night. There was no spare accommodation available because Cobalt's housing situation is acute. After years as a ghost town, it is booming again because of the demand for cobalt and silver.

The area destroyed ran from Lang Street to the Ontario Northland Railway tracks. Some 10 buildings were lost on Lang, main road leading north, and another five on narrow Peter Street, between Lang and the railway.

At the height of the fire residents of threatened houses hurriedly moved their furniture and other household effects into the street or nearby vacant lots. Firemen believed the damage might have been much greater if there had been any wind. The blaze was finally brought under control by 8 p. m. but great columns of smoke poured out as firemen doused the rubble.

Aid for Fire Victims

A start toward a fund for the fire victims was made last night when the Forty-Five Club, a young people's organization, announced the receipts from its Civic Holiday dance would be used to aid them.

Estimates of the damage varied widely because many people lost all their belongings in the blaze. Little insurance was carried by the victims. Although town clerk Cyril Vezina valued the buildings at an average of $2,000 each, this was believed to be the assessed value and the real price was believed higher.

The fire began in a garage on Lang Street and spread to seven other buildings in a row, licking across the street to other dwellings and across the narrow lots to Peter Street. Two garages, a store, the Parish Hall of St. Theresa Roman Catholic Church, a mission hall and a number of two-storey dwellings were among those destroyed.

JAPANESE BEETLES START CHEWING TOBACCO

Hartford, Conn., Aug. 5 (AP)—Japanese beetles have added tobacco chewing to their legion of bad habits, Connecticut tobacco growers report.

Authorities said that the beetles which normally shun tobacco this year "really are taking hold."

Attlee Seeks Powers To Expand Production And Meet Dollar Crisis

London, Aug. 5. (AP)—Prime Minister Attlee introduced surprise legislation in the House of Commons today to give his government broad new powers for increasing agricultural and industrial production to meet Britain's impending dollar crisis.

It was not clear precisely what powers the Labor regime would seek, but a highly-placed source said they did not provide for the right to direct labor.

Herbert Morrison, deputy prime minister, said the legislation would make possible "the full mobilization of the economic resources of the nation."

Anthony Eden, a Conservative spokesman and former Foreign Secretary, protested that the House could not deal with such broad legislation before its scheduled adjournment this weekend.

Morrison replied that, if it became necessary in the national interest, the House could postpone adjournment and "sit a bit longer".

The measure introduced would expand provisions of a 1945 Act under which the government was given added powers to direct the nation's transition from a wartime to a peacetime basis

The authoritative British Press Association said the bill "extends the purposes of the Act of 1945 so that it applies to the following objectives:

"(1) Promoting the productivity of industry, commerce and agriculture; (2) fostering and directing exports and reducing imports and redressing the balance of trade; and (3) ensuring that the whole resources of the community are used in a manner best calculated to serve the interests of the community."

Morrison said the measure would "implement" Attlee's crisis program, to be announced in the House of Commons Wednesday.

ALLEGED BANK ROBBER SAWS WAY OUT OF PRISON

Believed Harry Duguid Assisted in Jail Break by Confederate

Welland, Ont., Aug. 5 (CP) — Harry Duguid, 32-year-old London and Toronto plastics manufacturer-salesman, today escaped from Welland County jail where he was held on two bank robbery charges. County Sheriff Victor Davidson said the break must have been manoeuvred by means of a rope thrown over the jail wall by a confederate.

The night turnkey of the jail who had been on the job only a week first noticed the prisoner's escape at 1:20 a.m. this morning after Duguid had sawed a bar out of his cell and then sawed through a bar in a large window leading into the courtyard. He is then believed to have used a blanket to reach the earth before climbing the wall.

A quiet-spoken, slender man, Duguid was arrested June 3 after he allegedly held up and robbed the Imperial Bank branch at Stamford Centre and escaped with loot at $19,900 in cash and bonds. He was later charged with the 1942 holdup in Toronto of the Dominion Bank branch at Dovercourt and Davenport Roads when almost $15,000 was stolen.

The escape added another dra-

Tea Prices Jump 15 Cents Pound

Toronto, Aug. 5 (CP)—Price of most popular brands of tea jumped 15 cents a pound during the weekend, it was learned from tea importers here today. The price increase was said to affect all brands.

Blended teas previously retailing at 85 to 90 cents a pound will now sell at $1 and $1.05 while better brands retail at $1.15.

The price boost will be general throughout Canada, it was expected. One large tea company reported the new prices were effective for their brands everywhere in the country although reports from Vancouver indicated an average increase of 12 cents across the Dominion.

Importers explained the rise was due entirely to the resumption of open world markets. Tea no longer is under price control and tea importers here have had to bid for the commodity in the world market or do without it. They emphasized the boost was due to conditions in the Far East and hopes of holding the price steady or decreasing it depended entirely on increased production.

They explained Canada imports most tea from India and Ceylon but the United States, which gets quantities from Java and Sumatra in the Dutch East Indies, has invaded this market during the fighting in the Indies.

ANTI-SEMITIC DEMONSTRATIONS SEEN IN BRITAIN

Jewish-Owned Shops in London, Birmingham and Liverpool Damaged

By GLENN WILLIAMS

London, Aug. 5 (AP)—A Jew-baiting crowd of 700 persons damaged eight Jewish-owned shops in Manchester last night and early today as anti-semitic incidents flared for the fourth successive day in widely scattered British cities—including London, Birmingham and Liverpool.

Police arrested 38 demonstrators in Liverpool, where street lights were turned on during the night for the first time since power-saving blackout restrictions were ordered last winter.

Several Liverpool police were injured battling the demonstrators as firemen stood by ready to douse the rioters with hoses in case the situation got behind police control.

Although some quarters expressed belief that the riots were incited by "Fascist-like" organizations, police said they thought the vandalism was the work of irresponsible youths rather than an organized campaign of anti-semitism.

Shop windows were smashed in London's Bethnal Green section where many Jews live, and Communist headquarters in the

27 Immigrants Take in Toronto, Ten Get Jobs

Toronto, Aug. 5 (CP)—Twenty seven immigrants from Great Britain slept a lot, ate a lot and saw a lot yesterday, their first full day in Toronto. By nightfall their number shrank to 17 as 10 of the guests at the Ontario Immigration Service men's residence left for jobs, mostly on farms.

The 27 men were among 34 men and five women who arrived Sunday by history-making plane flight from the United Kingdom as Ontario started to implement Premier Drew's policy of bringing 7,000 British immigrants to this Province by air. Others of the 34 got jobs soon after they arrived.

The Salvation Army, which operates the residence, took the newcomers on a tour of the city, and exclaimed over the openness of everything.

"Your homes aren't all boxed in by hedges and walls," said one. In England you can live for 16 years in one place and never get to know the other people on the street."

On girl, Doris Holloway of Southampton, asked to see something typically Canadian and was introduced to a deodorized skunk. Despite assurances she shook hands with the animal with reluctance.

CANADA HOUSING SITUATION LIKELY TO GROW GRIMMER

Virtually No Houses Being Built for Rent And Material Costs Are Still High

(By The Canadian Press)

The Canadian housing situation remains grim and seems likely to grow grimmer, with virtually no houses being built for rental purposes and the prices of new homes being held high by mounting building costs, a Canadian Press survey showed today.

As one Toronto real estate agent put it: "The shortage is increase, much less reducing the we're not even keeping up with the normal annual population increase, much les reducing the 15-year backlog in building homes."

He agreed wih other real estate men and officials questioned across Canada that the small wage-earner, forming the greater part of Canada's working population, has little chance to obtain a new home at today's prices.

Although here and there a slight drop in cost of new homes was noted, prices generally across the Dominion were up 10 to 50 per cent over two years ago. Many high-priced new houses went begging because buyers simply did not have the money.

Sales Continue Brisk

Sales of lower priced homes and old houses continued brisk but a general stiffening of buyer resistance was noted. In many cases buyers asked that improvements be made to old houses before completion of a sale. The number of houses up for sale continued at about the same level and all across the country the rental situation remained acute with little accommodation available.

In the Maritimes, Halifax reported only about 32 houses for sales, most of them old and for non-occupancy ownership. They were not selling because of this. Prices were up 25 per cent from two years ago but the tendency was slightly downward. Saint John had about 150 houses for sale, six of them new, but at an "inflated" level. Fredericton reported many houses started a year ago were still unconstructed because of lack of money or shortage of materials.

Montreal had about 200 houses advertised for sale with prices ranging up to 20 per cent higher than two years ago. There were practically no unoccupied houses and some landlords were demanding bonuses of up to $300 for renting them.

The demand at Ottawa for houses with guaranteed possession far than exceeded the supply. About 300 new houses were built in the past 12 months, almost all by contracts for individuals.

600 Delegates Attend Parley

Mackinac Island, Mich., Aug. 5 (CP)—A two-month session of the North American Assembly for Moral Re-armament designed to be "an articulated and demonstrated expression of inspired democracy" opened yesterday at Island House. More than 600 delegates from five foreign countries, eight Canadian provinces and 30 of the United States are attending.

In the opening and keynote address, Dubois Morris, Jr., of Washington told the delegates the session was "not a conference but a working demonstration with a mission to give an ideology....to the nation and the world."

"It is a model everyone is talking about but no one has built," he said. "Here is being produced America's most needed export to Europe—the 'know-how' of team work."

Part of British Campaign Against Palestine Violence

Two Policemen Found Dead Under Blast Debris

Jerusalem, Aug. 5 (AP)—British authorities today arrested the Mayors of the Jewish towns of Tel Aviv, Ramat Gan Nathanya and Petah Tigva (Tinkvah) and jailed dozens of other Jewish political leaders in drawn raids described officially as "part of the campaign against terrorism." But violence continued.

A Labor Department building in the street of the Prophets was blasted by a bomb which killed a British policeman trying to remove the explosive. Two others were trapped in the debris, from which arose a mushrooming smoke cloud.

(Reuters news agency says two British policemen were found dead under the debris of Jerusalem's health department building, blown up by terrorists today, bringing the day's official death toll to three.)

Seven Reported Missing

British troops investigated an Arab report that six armed Jews had taken a Briton into an orange grove in the Tel Aviv area. Another unconfirmed report asserted that five British soldiers and their army vehicle were missing in the same area.

The arrests came after two weeks of Jewish underground violence in Palestine during which two young British army sergeants were hanged and strangled to death on small trees near Nathanya.

Among those arrested were most members of the Tel Aviv municipal council and many leaders of the Revisionist party —accused by the Palestine government last year of being the forerunner of Irgun Zvai Leumi, Jewish extremist organization.

A government spokesman, who said the arrests were made under "defence emergency regulations," declared that "approximately 60" persons had been marked down for detention, but that "some may have gotten wind of it and taken cover."

The Jewish community was stunned by news of the arrests, but pending clarification of the British action no official reaction was forthcoming.

Arab View

The reaction of the Arab higher executive, most of whose members are in Cairo for a meeting, was voiced by one attache, however, who said:

"Has the British Empire come to the point where it arrests a bunch of harmless old men to get even with Terrorists for murdering British soldiers? If this is the British answer to terrorism, then it is clear that a stronger hand is needed."

A government source said that Gen. Sir Alan Cunningham, British High Commissioner for Palestine, was being kept closely informed of the progress of the raids and of those arrested.

The arrested mayors were Israel Rokach of Tel Aviv, Abram Krinitzi of Ramat Gan, over Ben Ami of Nathanya and Joseph Saphir of Petah Tikvah. Rokach, who holds a CBE (Commander of the British Empire) decoration, was placed under house arrest for health reasons after first being taken to Jaffa police headquarters.

Egypt Appeals To United Nations Security Council

By MAX HARRELSON

Lake Success, Aug. 5 —(AP)—Egypt appealed to the United Nations Security Council today to imperial power" by ordering the immediate withdrawal of all British troops from Egyptian soil.

The appeal was made personally by Egyptian Premier Nokrashy Pasha as the council began consideration of Egypt's complaint that continued presence of British forces in Egypt was a "potential peril" to peace in the Middle East.

"We are here," Nokrashy Pasha declared, "to challenge the basic assumptions of the 19th century imperialism."

In his 10,000-word speech, the Egyptian Premier informed the council that his government no longer considered itself bound by the Anglo-Egyptian treaty of 1936 under which British forces are stationed in his strategic Mediterranean country.

Predicts Terrific Struggle Before Europe Ever Falls to Communism

St. Thomas, Aug. 5 (CP)—Communism has made alarming progress in Europe during the last two years but "there is going to be a terrific struggle before it ever falls to the Reds," Ross Munro said in an address today to the St. Thomas Kiwanis Club.

"The war's destruction, economic and moral decay and confusion made Europe a fertile field for the work but Europe still has a long way to go before it is in the grip of the Kremlin bosses," said Mr. Munro, recently returned from his post as European correspondent for The Canadian Press.

"Europeans generally fear the Russians and Communism would do better there if it were not sponsored by them. Even the people of eastern Europe look upon them as Asiatic interlopers on a continent with a cultural and artistic history greater than any."

Communists had achieved their success by preying on the confusion of the time "and also by being the smartest, hardest-working politicians. They are the eager beavers of politics...they are not long-haired, wild-eyed revolutionaries but natty characters in dark double-breasted suits which seem to have become their uniform as much as the black peak-cap in Russia is the inevitable mark of the secret police."

Mr. Munro said he was continually surprised in Europe to find people whom he least suspected of being Communists turning out to be sympathetic and sometimes actual party members. Among them was a British colonel who was in secret service during the war and parachuted into France twice. They had achieved a respectability among Europeans that contrasted sharply with the position of early revolutionaries.

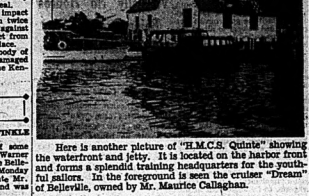
Look for Tillodont, Rat Big as Bear, Lived Aeons Ago

Washington, Aug. 5 (AP)—A guest for the fabulous Tillodont, a kind of bear-sized rat, was announced last night by the Smithsonian Institution.



Dr. C. L. Gazin, Smithsonian paleontologist, is seeking bones of the weird animal in southern Colorado where the Tillodonts are believed to have flourished some 50,000,000 years ago.

Experts said the largest of the Tillodont beasts have been about the size of a brown bear, but their teeth were strongly suggestive of an ancestral rat.

"This family apparently represented one of nature's adventive experiments," the announcement said, "

Here is another picture of "H.M.C.S. Quinte" showing the waterfront and jetty. It is located on the harbor front and forms a splendid training headquarters for the youthful sailors. In the foreground is seen the cruiser "Dream" of Belleville, owned by Mr. Maurice Callaghan.

Belleville and Kingston Sea Cadet Corps Hold First Get-Together Here

Belleville's waterfront went "Navy" over the weekend and the blue and gold lanes and round rigs of officers and men of the Kingston and Belleville Sea Cadet Corps predominated as perfect weather greeted their first annual get-together centred around "H.M.C.S. Quinte" new home of the local corps.

Approximately fifty officers and cadets of the Kingston Corps were here in force with naval vessels, dinghies and other nautical equipment.

Early afternoon several private yachts added white-winged color to the naval activities engaging in races over the sunlit waters of the bay at this point.

Colorful Picture

The bay presented a colorful picture with the fine boats of Commodore P. H. Wills, officer of the day, Mr. Maurice Callaghan and Frank Chisholm, who generously volunteered the services of his boat and crew to act as starter for the cutter races, and two outstanding sailing craft from Kingston, the Kindersleys.

Honors in the naval races rested evenly after the final heat was run off. Kingston cadets showed the way to their Belleville cousins in the cutter events while the Quinte youngsters finished well ahead of the Kingstonians in the dinghy races.

Maurice Callaghan, Jr., won the sailing race in his 9m craft showing the way to Cadet Kindersley.

Commander R. W. Hart was course captain assisted by Lieut. Fair of the Kingston Corps. Lieut. Knudsen was official timekeeper assisted by Lieut. Wickerson, Clark and Kidd. Capt. John Wallan was starter.

Many Spectators

Crowds of people lined the many points of vantage along the waterfront to view the races and other nautical events. The bay was pleasingly sprinkled with pleasure craft of all descriptions with a number of them anchored to watch the youthful sailors go through their regatta paces.

On Saturday evening the Quinte Oil Company for its dock space.

Corps were hosts to their Kingston visitors in a highly informal sea dance which was featured by an entertaining floor show staged by the Belleville Corps.

One of the prettiest sights of the regatta was the arrival of the naval ketch towing small sailing craft, as it moved slowly up the harbor. With flags flying the cadets and officers standing at attention, the craft sailed majestically by the H.M.C.S. Quinte's official ship where Lieut. Addison Lloyd officer commanding the "Quinte" took the salute. With him was General Chairman Gilbert Sleckhouse. The ketch then moved out into the harbor, turned, and headed for the "Quinte", jetty where she moored.

Part of the social events was a Saturday midnight cruise in the ketch which took some thirty officers, their wives, and cadets to Massassaga Point and back.

An Annual Event

Lieut. Lloyd was loud in his praise of the success of the affair. He expressed his appreciation to his officers, and those who assisted in the success of the regatta.

Announcing that the regatta would be an annual event, he felt that such affairs as these served to cement comradeship as well as engender a healthy rivalry between the two corps. He paid tribute to the fine work done by Maurice Callaghan, Jr., Maurice Callaghan, John Watson and others who actively associated with the corps but who have plenty of interest and enthusiasm in the welfare of the boys.

He also paid tribute to Commodore P. H. Wills for his interest in the corps and the part he took in the weekend activities and expressed appreciation of the services offered by Mr. Orland Pinkston for the use of chairs and the Imperial

Strike at Ford Plant Averted

Detroit, Aug. 5 (AP)—A strike of the Ford Motor Company's 107,000 production workers set for noon today was averted under an agreement calling for a contract to be worked out in 30 days or a dispute involving the Taft-Hartley labor law.

The company and the United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.), achieving an 11th hour settlement, agreed to set up a joint committee to draw up a code on the definition of "liability of the union" to damages suits.

A period of 12 months for this to be done was allowed in the agreement.

As a consequence of the agreement the company's army of production workers stayed on the job today and the Ford factories were kept humming after a threat of paralysis from a potential nationwide shutdown.

Union officials said all Ford locals would be notified of the agreement in time to prevent the walkout.

The year's grace to the union in damage suit liability under the new law will be dated from the date of the Ford - U.A.W. contract still to be drawn.

Negotiations on other contract issues, including the reported $30,000,000-a-year workers' pension plan, will resume Tuesday both sides said.

The Ford - U.A.W. statement expressed the "confidence" of company and union officials that the remaining issues could be settled "within a relatively short time."

A strike against Ford had been threatened in an effort to enforce the union's demand for a compulsory union shop, giving it immunity from the Taft-Hartley labor law provisions. The law permits an employer to sue a union for damages in event of a violation of its contract with management.

Barn is Burned, Eight Pigs And One Calf Lost

Roslin (Special) — On Sunday evening the barn on the farm of Mr. Donald Vance, who lives about a mile and a half east of the village, was completely destroyed by fire. Mr. Vance was at home at the time of the fire and succeeded in getting out part of the live stock, including the horses and cattle and some of the calves, while eight pigs and one calf were lyst in the blaze.

The fire spread so rapidly that by the time neighbors arrived at the scene it was too late to save anything more.

This is the second barn Mr. Vance has lost in less than two years, as the first was built only about a year ago to replace the one which had collapsed the previous winter during a heavy snow and windstorm.

String of Fish Found on Road

The fame of the Bay of Quinte district as a fisherman's paradise is well and widely known but it is were said that there is plenty of fish in the highways as well as in the lakes and bays, the story might not be believed.

But a Belleville resident vows this is so and over the weekend he had the fish to prove his story.

The local resident was driving along the Belleville-Redneresville highway on Monday morning, when in front of a farmer's house he found a string of fish. Included in the string were seven pickerel and three bass. Several of the pickerel measured 15 inches in length.

The party was going to a picnic and filled some of the fish for supper and brought the balance home to some of the neighbors.

That's the second time I have found fish on the highway this summer, commented the resident who decided to remain anonymous. "From now on I am going to do my fishing right on the road."

But he explained that the string of fish had apparently been strung on a wire and the wire had broken unknown to the owner.

"I'd like to have seen the expression on that poor fisherman's face when he found his fish were gone," commented the lucky finder.

To a Land of Promise

The modern emigrant from the Old World flies across the Atlantic. This is something new in a world that is very old in many ways but in transportation of course things are new. Ontario has welcomed thirty-nine Britons who crossed from their homes in the Old Land to new homes in this Province in twenty hours.

In other days the emigrant had a long time to get ready for the conditions of the new lands of promise. He travelled slowly according to modern measurements of time, had time to ponder deeply over his decision and when he arrived at his journey having been transformed by the ocean journey almost into a seaman. Time is too short for that today.

The rapidity of transplantation that is possible now is one of the marvels of the age. Life on the farm and in the settled areas moves swiftly too as well as the planes that carry the newcomers across the Atlantic.

Back of all the changes is the great appeal, a large share of which is anticipation of progress in the rapidly growing New World. War is to be its guarantee that the Old World has made it possible for many to decide to tear themselves loose from the older countries and seek as the ancestors of the present people new lands and new homes in the New World. Two wars have greatly upset the Old World and mid-twentieth century folk of the older countries decide to follow in the path of the ancestors of the present populations of American countries like the United States and Canada and seek new pastures and new homes in the "promised lands" of the west.

What they arrive in are thoroughly modern countries, virile with the strength of youthfulness and advancing forward with remarkable speed to the attainment of the best in modern democracy. The newcomers will not have to repeat all the hardships of the older generations of emigrants to whom landing in the New World meant nothing earnestly to everything. That is not so now. They come to find the advantages right at hand in the lands to which they travel. Steel ploughs are not cast for the first time persons especially. Those who come from the British Isles, The Netherlands, and other European countries will find much that is familiar in the New World, at least in the basis of the thought of the new world which has had a potent effect on the development of New World Countries, the latter having adopted many of the finer traits of the old lands and developed much of their own under the spirit of a newfound freedom.

From Britain have just come Britishers whom Ontario welcomes as it bids a hearty addition to the people of the Province. Holland is sending some of her people and they too will be gladly greeted with assistance for these Britons and Hollanders have a spirit that will add to the richness of the Canadian spirit. From the war-torn lands of the Continent are coming displaced persons, who have the a rich heritage of European culture.

Newcomers possess a spirit that is intensified and electrified by the atmosphere of the Western World. Among these are highly trained men and women whose training will not be lost in this country of opportunity.

The spirit of the emigrant will rise with the opportunity which a young land like Canada offers. The spirit of the new pioneer inspires not only himself but those among whom he comes to make his home.

The newcomers have a rich example in the progress of the Western World. The peoples of North America are mostly all the descendants of immigrants or are those who have become citizens of the New World countries. For the world's advancement in 1947 the New World yet offers opportunity not only to her sons and daughters but to the displaced who have undergone great hardships in the recent generations. Emigration is not ended, nor is it confined to Northern America. The beckoning of the lands of opportunity is seen in the desire of advanced people in Europe who also look to South Africa, Australia and New Zealand.

That this age will be an age of emigration is clear. The impact caused by war and the impact of the ideas and citizens of lands that welcome new citizens to their fields and communities, form a basis for immigration. Their presence in the welcoming lands will have an influence that will be potent for greater and greater developments. The new countries are forward [illegible] to greater and greater

U. N. Halts Hostilities

The end of the sudden blazings in Indonesia has been brought about by the United Nations as both sides in the dispute announce their readiness to rest their case with the Security Council.

This means prestige for the body of nations created to prevent wars and misunderstanding. This is the first attempt of the kind and still have no doubt not only the benefit of bringing the two sides to understanding but it will at the same time inspire the organization of the United Nations and have an influence upon the world's attitude to the United Nations.

Schools for Eskimos

Before the aeroplane pushed back Northern frontiers, only a handful of Canadians had any real knowledge of the way of life, habits and capabilities of the Eskimos, reveals The Winnipeg Tribune. There were many myths regarding them which were widely believed but are now exploded. It is realised that they are little different from the dwellers in the South part of the country.

Not many years ago it was frequently asserted, and generally believed, that an Eskimo could not long survive if taken out of his own habitat. Those brought down to hospitals at The Pas and Winnipeg, however, have taken kindly to the climate and to the ways of the white man. It has been seriously announced that they could not assimilate a formal education, but experience has shown that Eskimo children are apt pupils, learning just as quickly as their white brothers and sisters.

During the war, airmen who "invaded" their territory found that the Eskimos had real mechanical and mercantile ability. They are excellent hunters and shrewd traders. Some of the fliers who wished to stay their leisure hours while in the North by playing poker with the natives can testify there is nothing slow or stupid about them.

Mining and other developments will be pushed further North, and as a result the way of life for the Eskimo is bound to be changed. It is the Government's responsibility to see that the change by providing educational and health facilities. Building of Eskimo schools is an excellent start. — Stratford Beacon Herald.

New Uses for Modern Buses

A chauffeur-driven bus seats the president of a Texas ice company around the 1,000-mile circuit of his plants.

With all the comforts of a Park Avenue penthouse it has two master stateroom, showers, a galley, refrigeration and air-conditioning.

This was only one new luxurious homeon-wheels praised by the Automobile Manufacturers Association. Other specially converted standard buses are used by:

A Midwest plastic surgeon, who uses his for complexion treats.

A Detroit auto dealer, whose special bus is a travelling salesroom for motor parts says "Pathfinder."

Trees for the West

There is a much bigger demand for trees today than the forestry stations at Indian Head and Sutherland, Sask., can provide. As a result the Canadian Forestry Association is asking the Dominion Department of Agriculture to secure more land adjacent to these stations to enable still more trees and shrubs to be grown. The association is also urging that greenhouses be provided so that research in tree hardiness and in tree pests and diseases may be studied, Lethbridge Herald remarks.

The reward of a thing well done is to have done it.—Emerson.

AWKWARD

At socials and teas little grace I command,
And how in such circles I rate,
For I never have properly learned how to stand
And balance a cup on a plate.

I'm an awkward old fellow, I frankly admit.
I don't like to eat standing up.
At fancy affairs where there's no place to sit,
I fumble the plate and the cup.

If I chat, I slide pieces of meat to the floor,
As if I were feeding a pup;
And I doubt if I live to be ninety and more,
I'll gracefully balance the cup.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

What is the Black Forest?

The Black Forest ("Schwarzwald" in German) is a wooded mountainous region lying parallel with the Rhine in southwestern Germany.

Two-thirds of the district lies in Baden and the other third in Wurtemberg.

It is about 100 miles long from 10 to 30 miles wide and has an area of 3,000 square miles, considerably larger than Rhode Island.

Here the mountains, the highest peak of which is Feldberg with an altitude of 4,897 feet, are cut off sharply on the south by the Rhine and they form the watershed of the Vosges range on the French side of that river.

The Black Forest is not, as many suppose, a continuous stretch of woodland, although cattle breed, wooded slopes the foot hills and lower spurs of the mountains and the forests extend to altitudes of 4,000 feet.

It is from the dark hue of the firs that the district gets its name. Because of the cold and rainy climate only hard cereals can be grown in the higher altitudes; but in the warmer valleys good pastures and vineyards abound.

Numerous mineral springs and watering places, such as those at Baden-Baden, have made the Black Forest a favorite tourist resort.

Several of the mountain passes in this district figured in the wars of the French Revolution.

HAVE A CRUSH OF WHEAT

Any cereal to be used in feeding an infant or an invalid should be unrefined but finely ground (italics mine). Most of the so-called "enriched" cereals, like "enriched" flour, cannot compare nutritionally with the whole-grain products.

So says Adele Davis in the only cook book that gets itself room in my kitchen. "Let's Cook It Right, published by Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York, $3 — and written in answer to the constant application of nutritional knowledge in the kitchen you can't go wrong if you follow the advice given in this book.

Triple — cleaned, unground wheat, purchased at health food stores, makes an excellent cereal, the author states. "Just what triple-cleaned means, but it's quite sufficient for you to know that the whole good wheat berry in plain water and let me serve it with cream, fruit and butter. Raw and entire—it makes a most wholesome dish. Put it in the coffee mill and served either raw or cooked as the cook-book's breakfast cereal.

From the point of view of nutrition, says the author, it that is no such needed cook book points out, it makes no difference whether a food is hot or cold — the old idea that a raw food is superior to a cooked one is unfounded. "There is no good reason why any one of us in the world can't lunch to school or work and eats it cold or reheated should not digest the food as well and derive every benefit from it that he or she can derive from a hot lunch provided, of course, that the food has not soured or spoiled by long standing in a warm place, or such food as milk.

In the pamphlet "What to Eat" available on written request if you inclose stamped envelope bearing your address" I give you cereal ways to use plain wheat in my family dietary—ways readers of this column have asked for. For instance there is the flour mill, the seed store, the feed store, the farmer or maybe the state inspector at the farmers' market. If you ask one of these for, say, five pounds of just plain wheat, and be boggled about selling it in that condition, stop him and look out for wares for it. But this is as far as I can go with you in the matter of wheat, although a cup, cooked, makes a good drink for the children. Ask your cook in your next letter to look back in your cook-book for directions."

(Mrs. W.M.)

Answer — Send us your full address and we will be pleased to forward your address and ask for booklet "Dietary Suggestions" Address 121, but it is perhaps all of the things you have mentioned. Sometimes a single factor — nutritional deficiency. You'll find more about this in the booklet.

(Mrs. H.M.)

Answer — Scald it. In that will make any milk safe. Scald every Weather. Let's Cook It Right, to a temperature just below the boiling point; to cook slightly, or to scald from the word "scald" which means "heating in hand, burning" and so, surface, more or less cooking. The Seven Keys to Vile

I have found so many of your readers interested in facts that I want to learn more about Vile. Please find inclosed a stamped paper, with no filthy stickum on it, and a stamped envelope bearing my address, for the booklet "The Seven Keys to Vile." At our house we enjoy your good commonsense almost as much as we respect your medical knowledge.

Answer — If you mean that the condition of many of the color people could be greatly amplified under why in San Hill they can't simply wrap the coin in a bit of paper and let it go at that. I doubt if they would offer a coin to a newspaper or a hotblack for such condition.

Dipsomania

I'd like your literature on dipsomania, meaning the person who cannot go without drinking spree just every, sick or subject to periodic drinking spells.

(Mrs. W.M.)

Answer — Send us your full address and we will be pleased to forward your address and ask for booklet "Dipsomania" Address 121, but it is perhaps all of the things you have mentioned. Sometimes a single factor — nutritional deficiency. You'll find more about this in the booklet.

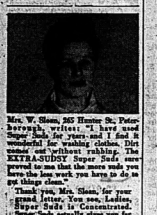
Police Renew Search for Knife

Kingston, Aug. 5 — (CP) — District police, aided by Boy Scouts, today renewed the search of Lake Ontario Park here for the knife believed to have been used in the fatal stabbing of 28-year-old Gerald Harrison of Toronto last Sunday.



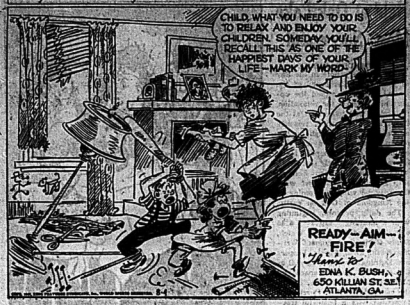
Meanwhile police held Leon Stafford, 24-year-old Negro from Waycross, Ga., on a charge of murder and John Harris, 23-year-old Negro of Tallahassee, Fla., as a material witness. Harrison died early Sunday after being stabbed in the heart during a dice game at the lakeshore park. Stafford has been remanded to Aug. 12 for preliminary hearing.

Police described the two Americans as tourists and a search conducted yesterday for the knife was unsuccessful even though a magnetizer was used.

GOVERNOR OF UNITED PROVINCES OF INDIA

London, Aug. 5 (Reuters) — Dr. Bidhan Chandra Roy, personal physician to Mr. K. Gandhi, was appointed Monday as Governor of the United Provinces of India as from Aug. 15.

Since Dr. Roy is in the United States, King George approved the appointment of Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, Indian poet, as acting Governor until Dr. Roy takes up new duties.



Mrs. W. Sloan, 265 Hunter St., Peterborough, writes: "I have used Super Suds for years and I find it wonderful for washing clothes. Dirt comes out without rubbing. The EXTRA-SUDSY Super Suds convinced me that the more suds you have the less work you have to do to get things clean."

Thank you, Mrs. Sloan, for your grand letter. You see, Ladies, Super Suds is Concentrated. Super Suds actually gives you more washing power . . . richer suds, whiter, brighter. And Super Suds cares no more than ordinary washday soap.

In Birmingham a wall was decorated with a sign nearly half a block long emblazoned with yard-high letter proclaiming:

"Gentiles arise, resist Jewish enterprise. Remember Palce and Martin."

Sergeants Hanged

Mervyn Paice and Clifford Martin were the two British sergeants hanged by Jewish extremists in Palestine last week in retaliation for execution of three members of the Jewish underground.

There was no indication of who had put up the sign invoking their memory.

The Communist Daily Worker, however, asserted that the anti-Jewish demonstrations were "inspired by organized gangs who, like Hitler, have embraced anti-semitism and who cry the name of Sir Oswald Mosley from street corners." It called on Home Secretary Chuter Ede to suppress these activities.

Mosley, pre-war head of the British union of Fascists, was imprisoned during the war. Since his release he has published a periodical called "The Mosley News Letter" distributed publicly at meetings of the British League of Ex-Servicemen, which police say includes many of his pre-war followers.

Leadership Camp Held at Oak Lake Most Successful

By MAUDE BURKE

Sixty young people in the Bay of Quinte Conference of the United Church accepted the opportunity offered for relaxation, inspiration and fellowship at the leadership Camp, held recently at Oak Lake. The high quality of leadership, coupled with the enthusiasm of the campers, made the camp outstandingly successful, the genuine Christian Fellowship giving a foretaste of what life may be with the coming of the Kingdom of God on earth.

The daily program beginning with a morning dip at 6:45 o'clock, included Morning Watch, Study Groups, Assignment Writing, Sports Week, Spoke, Vesper and Evening Campfires, as well as the excellent meals prepared by Mrs. Currie of Woodville. Before the camp closed Mrs. Currie was presented with a beautiful travelling bag, in token of her 25 years of service with the camp.

Rev. Gordon W. Porter brought a series of challenging messages on the theme "Jesus, as His Friends Knew Him". Other discussion leaders on these topics were Rev. V. Zufelt, Rev. J. D. Martin and Rev. L. Shorten. Method courses were given as follows:

Camping Missions by Rev. Earle Leard, of Toronto.

Christian Missions by Rev. Jack C. Thompson, of Toronto.

Recreation by Rev. Lewis of the O.H.C., Toronto.

Christian Culture by Rev. Ralph Hall.

Certificates Presented

Seventy-five certificates were presented at the closing campfire Campers taking the various courses.

Vesper addresses were given by the Rev. Dean, Rev. W. W. Patterson of Newcastle; Miss Patterson was the Ora of Miss Lindsay at the camp. Musical Appreciation was in charge of Mrs. Bruce Gordon of Peterborough, and Rev. Charles Dawes of Aylmer, Quebec, while Mr. and Mrs. Stephen G. Saywell of Oshawa, performed the duties of director and secretary.

Evening programs were enjoyed by many young people unable to be present for the entire week. These included Stunt Night and Play Party directed by Miss Lewis. Saturday evening Miss Gale Rogers, who was voted Chief Camper of 1946", received the torch from Miss Isobel Richardson, "Chief Camper of 1945".

A Sunday morning communion service in the outdoor chapel, at the water's edge, climaxed the week's activities, its beauty leaving in every camper's heart a determination to live in closer fellowship with God, and to manifest the spirit of Christ in daily contacts and human relations.

On Monday a special holiday program was enjoyed with Rev. J. E. Griffith as theme speaker, and with fellowship groups led by the Forward Movement team. Messrs. Alan Borland and Isaac Mathuni.

Cobalt's faith in its future was not shaken by fire on July 8, 1909, which wiped out practically the whole community. Business men called it "a veritable blessing" in disguise. Fire in June, 1918, didn't reach Cobalt. It came up from Haileybury and just touched outskirts.

At Woodbridge, Doris Holloway, who flew to Canada from England, saw her first Highland Games. From the South of England, she had never been to Scotland. The Highland Fling took her fancy.

Plenty of bacon, plenty of eggs, all the butter they could eat and other luxuries not enjoyed in Great Britain for several years gladdened 27 British immigrants who spent Sunday and Monday in the men's residence of the Ontario Immigration Service on Jarvis St. The residence is operated by the Salvation Army. A group of men is seen here, with Salvation Army officials watching as they ate dinner yesterday.

Much Suffering Reported On Refugee Ship

Paris, Aug. 3 —(Reuters)— An eyewitness account of the "suffering, intense heat and crowded, unsanitary conditions" aboard one of the three British ships loaded with Jewish immigrants brought back from Palestine waters was given today by a French press correspondent who claimed to have secretly boarded the Empire Rival, disguised as a doctor.

The 4,500 immigrants from the ship exodus of 1947 are refusing to land anywhere except in Palestine, and were today still waiting in the British vessels outside the French Mediterranean harbor of Port-de-Bouc for an Anglo-French decision as to their destination.

The correspondent said that in the infirmary of the Empire Rival he found 200 to 300 women and children lying half-clothed on the floor in a temperature of 122 degrees fahrenheit, with the sun beating down on the decks above and the ventilators not working.

"A few were on camp beds," said the correspondent. "The others, suffocating, were lying on the floor crammed stomach to stomach . . . the women, groaning slightly . . . and with vague eyes seemed to have lost awareness of their human condition," he said.

He added that the leader of the Jews told him: "We will not land, the British are trying to starve us out. They are ready—if the French government consents—to wait six months in the roads. We shall wait, however long it takes."

Meanwhile, it was learned here authoritatively that the British government had made it clear to the immigrants that whatever happened, they would not be shipped back to Palestine or Cyprus.

CANADA HOUSING

Few Homes Listed

In Eastern Ontario Belleville had few homes listed for sale and those were generally about 30 per cent above 1945's prices. More than 200 homes were built or planned this year. Oshawa said prices and sales kept to the level of war years.

Higher prices than 1945 were reported generally in Western Ontario, up to 50 per cent at Stratford, where 80 houses were listed for sale and there were no empty homes. Galt estimated 440 to 50 houses were sold monthly with prices at a high level. Buyers at Guelph as elsewhere were demanding immediate occupancy and two realtors suspended business temporarily because they did not have the conscience to sell "new-priced houses at the present ridiculous rates." The rental situation was acute in all Western Ontario cities.

Some 300 homes were listed for sale at Toronto with prices continuing at a high level; higher-priced bungalows went begging as buyers showed more discrimination. Sales were just as rapid as ever and virtually no homes were listed for renting.

At Winnipeg the price of older houses were reported declining slightly with contractors viewing this as the first stage of the end of the building boom. Prices of new houses also declined, although they were about 10 per cent up over 1945.

Prices Inflated

On the Prairies Moose Jaw reported prices holding up well for both old and new homes with 74 houses in various stages of construction. Regina had sold 150 houses built this year, the same as 1946 with little private construction.

Saskatoon reported hundreds of houses for sale, about five per cent of them new bungalows with prices off five to 10 per cent from a year ago but still greatly "inflated." Only about half of 600 houses started last year have been finished. No rentals were available. At Edmonton prices on new homes fell off slightly from two years ago but higher materials costs kept down the number started. Both there and at Calgary the rental situation was acute.

On the coast Vancouver reported building costs had advanced slightly due to higher lumber prices. Prices held firm but private building was down from last year. Dealers said down payments on new homes, mostly two-bedroom bungalows, were less than a year ago.

Talks on Boosting Ruhr Coal Output In Middle August

London, Aug. 2 — (AP)—Government sources predict that British-American talks in Washington on boosting Ruhr coal output will be deferred until mid-August, when British officials hope the full significance of Britain's economic plight will have become clear to the United States government and people.

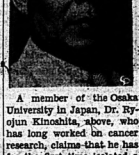
Informants said the British government was anxious to delay the parley until Prime Minister Attlee places details of the economic position before parliament next week.

These sources said it was "safe to assume" British anxiety to hold the Ruhr talks after Attlee's statement meant that "the whole question of revising present financial arrangements" in the economically merged British-American zones of Germany would be raised in Washington. The Ruhr lies in the British sector.

Scientists Fly To Study Eskimos

Winnipeg, Aug. 2 (CP)—An R.C.A.F. Dakota bearing a group of Queen's University scientists on their way to study food habits and diseases among Eskimos of Southampton Island, arrived yesterday.

The group, who will spend six weeks on the island, were able to replace equipment lost when the Hudson's Bay Company supply ship Nascopie struck a reef near Cape Dorset, Baffin Land, only at the last moment.

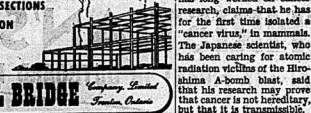


Meanwhile, the last of the Nascopie's passengers and crew to be returned to civilization are expected here today by train from Churchill. They had been at Cape Dorset, an isolated outpost, since July 21 when the 2,500-ton ship struck.

Two groups, one of six and one of seven, were flown to Winnipeg previously. James G. Wright, R. B. C. superintendent of the Eastern Arctic, a member of the second group, reached Ottawa yesterday from Winnipeg.

He said all posts would be supplied this year despite the loss of the Nascopie and the nearly 1,100 tons of supplies aboard her.

The supplies for the Eastern Arctic posts will be sent from Montreal by sea and ships out of Churchill will look after the posts in the western regions.



ISOLATES "VIRUS"

A member of the Osaka University in Japan, Dr. Ryojun Kinoshita, above, who has long worked on cancer research, claims that he has for the first time isolated a "cancer virus," in mammals. The Japanese scientist, who has been caring for atomic radiation victims of the Hiroshima A-bomb blast, said that his research may prove that cancer is not hereditary, but that it is transmissible.

MEN OF VISION

Painted for Calvert by Adam Sherriff Scott, R.C.A.

In 1833 CUNARD pioneered Ocean Steam Navigation

In 1622 CALVERT pioneered New World Development

CALVERT, Man of Vision of the 17th century, said to his New World settlers: "Seek to advance ...there is nothing beyond reach."

Famous English statesman and Secretary of State to King James I, Calvert founded historic colonies in the early 1600's. Well may Calvert have foreseen Canada's future when he said: "Preserve unity; it is a good country."

In 1855, the "Royal William" sailed from Pictou, N.S. to London, first vessel to cross entirely under steam. Sponsor of the voyage, Halifax-born shipowner and founded direct steam navigation between Britain and Canada ... contributing greatly to the development of the Dominion. For services rendered by his ships during the Crimean War, Cunard was created a baronet. Launched by Sir Samuel Cunard's early vision of trans-Atlantic steam navigation, there sails today the mighty Queen Elizabeth, flagship of the Fleet.

Calvert's ideals of unity have been shared by all men of vision since Calvert's time 300 years ago. Today, let each of us be a man of vision and "seek to advance."

Fire Destroys Summer Lodge At Pigeon Lake

Peterborough, Aug 5 (CP) — Fire of unknown origin Sunday night destroyed Oak Orchard Lodge, at nearby Pigeon Lake, with an estimated loss of more than $30,000. Only one person was reported injured, George K. Heibert, Philadelphia lawyer, who suffered burns about the head and neck while attempting to salvage some of his wife's jewellery.

Heibert and other guests, mostly Americans, lost all their luggage, clothing, fishing tackle and other personal property as the blaze burned the two-storey frame structure into a seething inferno within 30 minutes. The lodge, built in 1919, was one of the most opulent on the Kawartha Lakes district.

Indian guides, neighbors and guests formed a bucket brigade in a vain effort to control the fire, believed to have started in a linen closet. Eighteen guests were just going in to dinner shortly after seven p.m. when the blaze was discovered.

Use Care When Making Camp Fires

(1)—A good open spot near water should be selected, thoroughly cleared of brush and soaked well before fire is built. Make a circle of rocks for the fire bed and, when possible, use dry pine. It splits easily into kindling and doesn't throw off sparks. Don't use dry hemlock, cedar or balsam.

(2)—A long pole dug into the ground at a sharp angle and supported by a vertical crotch makes an excellent and sturdy "tee-pole." The pail of tea can be slid down the pole and poured minus any burned fingers.

(3)—Most important step of all is thoroughly extinguishing fire by splashing area with plenty of water. The soil underneath should be scraped to make sure there are no burning embers left.

Ross Munro Sure War Far Away

Sudbury, Aug. 5 (CP)—Belief that a third world war would not come for many years and "possibly not in our time" was expressed by Ross Munro, noted war correspondent of The Canadian Press in the last conflict, in a speech to the Kinsmen's Club here Saturday night.

Mr. Munro said: "In Europe the third world war is the chief topic of conversation, next to food and clothing. I feel that relations with Russia will remain strained for a long time, but I don't believe there will be war for many years, if ever in our time."

The danger lies in 15 years from now, not tomorrow, he prophesied.

Murder Charge Laid at Kingston Against Negro

(By The Canadian Press)

Ontario set something of a record during the Civic Holiday weekend when a mere nine violent deaths were recorded, a Canadian Press survey showed today. In all Eastern Canada the weekend fatality list was light with only 23 deaths listed up to Tuesday morning.

Seven of the violent deaths were in Quebec, four in New Brunswick and three in Nova Scotia. Traffic deaths headed the list with 10, there were six drownings and one man was killed by a train. Another man died in a fall. Others were victims of weapons, three dying from bullet wounds and one after being stabbed.

Two drownings Monday were those of Emerson Tremblay, 17, of Kingston in Collins Creek, six miles southwest of Kingston, while swimming and Mrs. Audrey Van Vliet, mother of three who died off Point Park beach near Fort Frances. The death from a fall also occurred Monday at Sarnia when James Stuthers, 60, succumbed in hospital. He was building a house when the accident occurred.

Lay Murder Charge

Police at Kingston laid a charge of murder against Leon Stafford of Waycross, Ga., after Gerald Morrison of Toronto was fatally stabbed in an argument during a dice game. A jealous quarrel was the police explanation for the deaths of Mrs. Preston Allison, 27, and her husband, also 27, from gunshot wounds at their Bury, Que., home. Police said they believed Allison shot his wife and then committed suicide.

In the third shooting, Marian Lawson, six, died at Cornwall Sunday from injuries suffered when accidentally hit by a bullet in the hands of her 14-year-old brother Malcolm, five, at Yarmouth, N.S., and Douglas Hardiman, 16, near Halifax.

Traffic victims were: William Hunt, 21, of Gananoque, near Kingston; Earl Cantley, 21, Albert Lussier, 27, and Bruno Challfour, 27, in separate accidents at Montreal; Adelard Labelle, 52, at Hawkesville, Que.; Denis Lefebvre, 26, at Lewis, Que., John Harnett, five, at Stoneham, Albert Cormier, 48 at St. Anthony, N.B. and Henry McGuinas at Bathurst, N.B.

Other deaths were: Bill Crossy, 52, of Smithville, Ont., killed by a train near Fraserville, Ont., Saturday; Elmer Hoar, 60, of Moncton, in a fall.

With last year's forest fire damage and firefighting costs in Canada totalling $3,722,032 and more than a million acres of forest ruined by fire, the various provincial Lands and Forestry Departments are doing everything in their power this year to eliminate such waste and destruction during the danger months of July, August and September, when dry woodlands and heavy winds create serious fire threats. Most fires are caused by carelessness by camp fire enthusiasts and in the above pictures two experienced guides are seen applying some of the do's and don'ts in making a camp fire.

Churchill Offers To Support Labor In Loan Quest

Woodstock, Oxfordshire, England, Aug. 5 (CP)—Winston Churchill offered yesterday to support the Labor government in an appeal to the United States for a new loan on condition that Britons "labor long and hard" to help themselves.

In a party speech the Conservative leader charged that Prime Minister Attlee's government had "frittered away" a great part of the present American loan of $3,750,000,000 on non-essentials.

Churchill also scoffed at what he called the "folly" of proposals for a coalition government to meet Britain's economic crisis, despite his offer of support to the Labor cabinet for "any and all sensible proposals, however severe, that are truly made in the national interest."

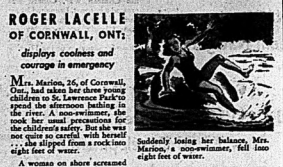
Speaking of "fields which deeply influence our island's fortune" he said "the foundation of British policy must be an even closer association with the United States." Britain must seek "something less precise and far more potent than an alliance."

Churchill said some of the terms of the present American loan alarmed him, notably the clauses requiring Britain to make her sterling debts to other countries freely convertible into dollars by last July 15 and that requiring non-discrimination against the United States in the reduction of imports.

Relies on Wisdom

"However, I relied, and I rely now, on the wisdom of the fair-minded American people to make the necessary reasonable adjustments."

He said "their is no shame in one brave and faithful ally, deeply involved in the same common struggle, asking another to help him recover and stand upon his feet. Had the positions been reversed, we would have done the same for them."



"Therefore I supported the American loan and I will still support and justify further appeals to the United States provided that we are doing our best, that we are making the most of our resources, that we are determined to become a self-supporting nation and system at the earliest moment and will put aside every impediment and labor long and hard . . ."

Covering the whole range of world problems as they affect Britain, Churchill hailed the proposal of State Secretary Marshall of the United States for aid to Europe and expressed the hope it would further his own personal dream of a United States of Europe. He denied that he hoped to divide Europe into two camps.

Youth Succeeds in Saving Woman Despite Frantic Struggle

WINS DOW AWARD

ROGER LACELLE OF CORNWALL, ONT;

displays coolness and courage in emergency

Mr., Marion, 26, of Cornwall, Ont., had taken her three young children on St. Lawrence Park to spend the afternoon bathing in the river. A non-swimmer, she took her usual precautions for the children's safety. But she was not quite so careful with herself . . . she slipped from a rock into eight feet of water.

A woman on shore screamed . . . and 13-year-old Roger Lacelle came running to see what was wrong. As soon as he saw Mrs. Marion spluttering and choking, he raced into the water and swam to her rescue. The panic-stricken women struggled frantically . . . scratching the boy's arms and pulling him under water in her terror. But Roger carried on his desperate attempt to save her life. Finally, he was successful in getting her to shallow water and then out of the river to safety.

Such presence of mind and unselfish bravery in a boy of 13 are not common. We take pride in paying tribute to these qualities in Roger Lacelle of Cornwall, Ontario, through the presentation of The Dow Award.

Suddenly losing her balance, Mrs. Marion, a non-swimmer, fell into eight feet of water.

Seeing the woman's plight, 13-year-old Roger Lacelle leaped into the river and swam to her aid.

THE DOW AWARD is a citation for outstanding bravery and heroism, and is a tangible expression of appreciation, established by Canada Savings Bank. Winners are selected by the Dow Award Committee, a group of editors of leading Canadian daily newspapers.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

To those on my list of dislikes, add partners who keep pulling sikes. Whenever successful they gloat. When not, they make partner the goat.

The word sike is bridge slang for a phony bid used at the psychological moment to confuse the opponent side. You can have my share of such players. However, there is no denying that some good results have been had on odd occasions.

Each year the western division of the American bridge league holds two coast championship conventions. Summer events are at Los Angeles and San Francisco; winter matches at Colorado.

Typical of what can happen to you is a recent Coronado deal. It is shown here:

♥ K 6 4 3
♦ 5 4 3 2
♣ K 2

WEST
♠ K J 10 4 3
♥ J 10 2
♦ A J 9 8

EAST
♥ A 7
♦ K Q 6
♣ A Q J 10 8 6 4

SOUTH
♠ A Q 6 5
♥ Q 9 8 5
♦ 10 7
♣ 7 5 3

The bidding went like this:

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 C	Dbl
1 S	Pass	2 C	Dbl
2 H	2 S	Pass	3 C
Pass	Pass	Pass

It is evident that some of these bids were wrong. We will not go into that. Only to mention the ones that you think are printed wrong. Because you will wonder how north could bid clubs twice.

After two passes, north reasoned that opponents might have a slam. So, he stuck in a sike bid of one club and all he had in his hand are a couple kings and a total of two clubs.

His second bid of two clubs was another sike. His strategy was planned to scare opponents into stopping short of their best bid. It did. They ended at three clubs when they had a slam.

After discovering what they had missed, they told me that only screamed: "Oh, Well." But I have my suspicions.

POINTERS BEAT C.N.R. VETERANS BY 7 TO 4 COUNT

Point Anne Crew Wins First Game of O.A.S.A. Playdowns With Boyle on the Mound

Blowing a two-run lead in the fourth when the Point Anne bats suddenly exploded in the fourth and fifth innings to score seven runs which netted them the game and the first victory in the seven-game series for the right to represent the Belleville Softball Association in the O.A.S.A. Intermediate "A" playdowns, the CNR Veterans went down to 7-4 defeat at the Point diamond last night.

Johnny Bawden on the mound for the losers had allowed but four hits in the first four frames and then the roof fell in. Bradshaw, Point Anne right fielder teed off in the fourth with a round tripper followed by clouts by Genereaux, Sero and Maracle. Four Point runners clattered across the plate and the damage was done.

The Point war clubs continued their barrage in the fifth, scoring three more runs off two hits, a walk and an error to tuck the game in the bag. That ended the scoring for the homesters.

Goyer Scores One

Veterans scored a single run in the third when Jimmy Barriage singled and came home on Vern Goyer's drive to centre field. They counted again in the fourth on Ronski's single and another by Moe Rollins. Rollins galloped home with another run in the sixth after he had walked and Bawden drove him in with a hit to left field.

Veterans attempted to rally in the ninth but the best they could do was one run with Vern Goyer racing across the plate on an infield out after he had hit safely.

Boyle Never in Trouble

Don Boyle although touched for nine hits kept them well scattered and was never in any serious trouble. Johnny Bawden pitched stellar ball except for the disastrous fourth and fifth innings. Outside of these frames he had the Pointers under control although they got to him for fourteen clouts.

Every player on the Point Anne team with the exception of Whitehead hit safely with Genereaux, Mallory, Bennett, Sero, Maracle and Bradshaw getting two hits each, Boyle and Moon got singles.

Goyer, Williams, and Ronski got two hits each for the losers with Barriage, Rollins and Bawden contributing one each.

The teams:

Point Anne — Genereaux cf; Mallory c; Bennett 1b; Sero ss; Maracle lf; Boyle p; Moon 2b; Whitehead 3b; Bradshaw rf.

Veterans — Barriage lf; Rowbotham c; Carson ss; Goyer 1b; Williams cf; Ronski 3b; Henri 3b; Williamson rf; Rollins 2b; Bawden p.

The score:

Point Anne	000 043 00x	7	14	2

Brown Bomber's Ring Days May Be Coming to Close

It looks as though the Brown Bomber's ring days might be coming to a close within the next year. After a fight career in which he has been the world's heavyweight boxing champion so long that people have forgotten what the last one looked like, Joe Louis has announced that he is contemplating retirement from the prize ring. He will quit in 1948 if "I am still undefeated".

Joe's ring plans for this year and next include a 10-round nontitle fight with Jersey Joe Walcott in New York Nov. 14 and in March of 1948 he meets the winner of the Ezzard Charles-Olle Tandberg bout scheduled for December.

The fighter who makes the best showing against him in these two contests will be given a chance to meet the champion in a 15-round title affair in New York next Summer.

After that, says the champ, retirement.

Bob Bogle of Brooklyn, a winner Sunday at Gananoque with his powerboat Blitz II, was accepted at the last minute as an entrant for the 40th International Gold Cup Regatta in Jamaica Bay, New York, next Sunday. Guy Lombardo, Canadian born orchestra leader, holds the cup, which he won at Detroit last year.

Assault and Armed, two of the United States track's heaviest money-winning racehorses, may be matched in a winner-take-all match race to be held during the current Washington Park Race meeting at Chicago, if a date can be arranged. The proposed race will be run over a mile and a quarter.

IKE WILLIAMS WINS BY K.O. OVER BOB MONTGOMERY

Trenton, N.J., Negro Now Undisputed King of the Lightweights

By OGLO ROBERTSON

Philadelphia, Aug. 5 (AP) — For the first time in five years the lightweight boxing division has an undisputed king — Ike Williams, Trenton, N.J., Negro with dynamite in his right fist.

Williams, heretofore ruler only in the domain of the National Boxing Association, took complete control of the 135-pounders in Philadelphia's Municipal Stadium last night with a six-round champion by edict of the New York and Pennsylvania Athletic Commissions.

The end of the double title came so sudden that the crowd of 30,500 hardly realized what had happened. For five rounds the two had battled furiously with Williams holding the edge.

Two minutes of the sixth round had passed when the bob cat straightened up from his usual crouch style of fighting. That was a mistake. Williams cut loose with a right cross that caught Bob flush on the chin. Down went Montgomery for the count of nine.

It was more by instinct than anything else that Montgomery got up. He was an easy mark — standing in Ike's corner and taking a two-fisted pasting until he fell to the canvas for the full count. The time was two minutes and 37 seconds.

"I just beat him to the punch" Ike said in his dressing room. "I saw he was getting ready to throw his right so I let mine go first."

The gate of $178,301 fell before pre-fight estimates. The champion fought for a 25 per cent cut while Monty received 30 per cent.

The victory, in addition to giving the lightweights their first undisputed champion since Sammy Angott hung up his gloves late in 1942, was sweet for Williams. One of the two knockouts he had suffered in a ring career that started in 1940 was at the hands of Montgomery. That was in 1944 when neither held claim to the title. The knockout was the third time Montgomery had been kayoed in 100 fights through 10 years of professional competition.

Kell of Detroit Leading Hitter In American

New York, Aug. 5 (AP) — George Kell, Detroit Tiger third sacker, regarded by many as the best hot corner guardian in the game, leads the American League in batting today while Philadelphia's Harry (The Hat) Walker continues to pace the National League in hitting.

Kell tacked eight points to his mark of a week ago to vault from fourth to the top rung with a .335 average, one point more than Lou Boudreau, manager of the Cleveland Indians. Boudreau topped the circuit a week ago with a .341 mark.

Walker lost a point during the span that includes Sunday's games but his .347 average is 20 points higher than runner-up Walker Cooper of the New York Giants. Cooper moved from third to second over Pittsburgh's Frankie Gustine, who tumbled to fourth with .320. Augie Galan of the Reds pulled into third with a .326 mark, one point less than Cooper.

Back of Gustine are Tommy Holmes, Boston, .309, Phil Cavarretta, Chicago, .308, Dixie Walker, Brooklyn, .306, Johnny Mize, New York, and Bob Elliott, Boston, .303 and Enos Slaughter, St. Louis, .302.

Joe DiMaggio, who set the pace for a number of weeks in the American League, brings up third place now with a .326 figure. Trailing the New York Yankee outfielder are Ted Williams, Boston, .323, Luke Appling, Chicago, .316, Barney McCosky, Philadelphia, .314, George McQuinn, New York, .308, Johnny Pesky, Boston, .306, Bob Dillinger, St. Louis, .304 and Tommy Henrich, New York, .301.

Two World Records Broken, Canadian Mark Established At Regatta Held at Picton

Bob Bogle Had Sufficient Points After Being Forced Out to Win Gold Cup

Ten thousand spectators, adding bright colorful touches to the deep greens of Picton's tree-bordered Bay of Quinte, saw two world records broken, one Canadian record established, and popularity Bob Bogle's trouble-free hero, add the famous Prince Edward Gold Cup to his steadily-increasing number of speed boat trophies at the Civic Holiday Regatta on Monday.

A winsome American lady, Mrs. Franklin Quilez of Exeter, Maryland, piloted her streaking Class "D" racing runabout beauty "Sesana VIII" to a new world's record over a measured mile course shortly after the crack of dawn. Official speed of the mile was 60.8 mph.

In the afternoon, her husband in competition broke the world's course record over a field of four when he sped over the triangular course at the official speed of 57.147 miles per hour.

Mercury Outboard Clayton, Ohio driver, drove his streamlined 135 cubic inch craft the triangular course at a speed of 72.575 miles per hour to establish a new Canadian record. In the 135 cubic inch class race in the afternoon, he attained the speed of 65.170 in the first heat and was speeding on his way to equal or surpass the world's record when the "Sesana Two-Doodler" capsized a few hundred yards from the finish line. He did not reappear in the second heat.

Had Sufficient Points

Bob Bogle's scarlet-colored speedster "Hills Hit" was a whirling, churning spraying spray in the teeth of the Jackie "Pops" Cooper boat "Speedster," soared over the finish line ahead of the field in two heats but developed exhaust trouble in the third which gave him a fourth.

However Bogle acquired sufficient points to win the Gold Cup. "Pops" Cooper's sturdy craft was awarded second place with two thirds and a second while Bill Braden's Waterdown, Ont., boat, "Ariel IV" was satisfied with 3rd. Gibson" Bradfield's Barnesville, Ohio beauty "Buckeye Baby" which won the Gold Cup and the Belleville Sargent Trophy here last year finished in fourth position. "Malt 'n Hops" driven by Jed Hanley, conducted a serious contender for the trophy chased "Hills" around the course in the first heat but developed engine trouble and was practically forced out of the race.

One of Belleville's entries the "Maid" driven by Ed Pine had an excellent chance to win the British American Trophy but mechanical trouble cost her the first heat. Coming up the stretch after repairs had been made the driver failed to cross the official finish line and lost his place in the heat. In the second heat after leading the field, "Maple Leaf" was overtaken by Kingston's "Hit Wit" driven by Harold Smith. She clasp the Division 1, 225 cubic inch was the first all-Canadian race of its kind held in Canada. A Picton boat driven by Floyd Johnson was hopelessly out of the race and did not finish.

Another Belleville entry "Miss Quinte" another Belleville entry finished fourth in the Class D Racing runabouts and third in the second heat of the Division 2, 225 cubic inch class.

Bourgeau's Hand Beverages First Defeat of Year

Bourgeau's Garage handed the fast-travelling Quinte Dry Beverages their first defeat of the season, over the holiday weekend, turning back the erstwhile City Commercial Softball League leaders by a 9-6 score to share in the rung of the loop ladder.

The Garage crew slammed an early lead shoving across four runs in the first frame and from that point on were never headed. The Beverage boys crept to within one run of the Bourgeau's mark in the fourth but in the next inning the Garage lads went on a rampage and smashed out four more runs to make victory sure. They scored another run in the ninth to tuck the game away.

Bourgeau's got two in the fifth and another in the seventh but failed to push over the tying striking distance and went down in order in the ninth for defeat.

Young started on the mound for the losers and was relieved in the fourth by Stewart after giving up four runs for five hits.

Carson went the route for the winners allowing them seven shots. Bell and Bagley hit home runs for Bourgeau's with Fitzgibbon getting out a three-bagger. Burley also got a two base hit. Day paced the losers attack with a home run and a triple. T Bellis contributed a two-bagger.

TRENTON FLYERS, PETERBOROUGH PLAY 4-4 TIE

Contest Played Before Large Crowd Under Lights at Exhibition Park

With both teams being guilty of many costly infield loose fielding, Trenton R.C.A.F. Flyers and the Peterborough Marines, National Baseball League "Commuter" battled to a four-all tie under the Exhibition Park floodlights last night.

The game sponsored by the Kinsmen Club attracted a large crowd and the proceeds will be diverted to the club's Community Swimming Pool project. A lucky draw for a suit of clothes was won by Mr. George Avery, 90 Dundas East, who held Ticket No. 1178.

Flyers sent Napanee's burning star McTaggart to the mound and he responded with a fine three-hit, nine-innings route. McTaggart struck out two and walked three Peterborough hitters.

Bellville's Whitehill took the mound chore for the Petes and but for a disastrous fifth inning when his infield threw the ball all over the lot, paving the way for two Trenton runs, he have pitched out with a win. He sent down seven Flyer batters in the strike-out route and issued but one free pass.

Nearly Pulled Game Out

Eddie Whitehill went to the mound for the Petes in the eighth and was touched for two safeties in the ninth when Flyers nearly pulled the game out of the fire. They were gone and Flyer short-stop Bridgeman beat out a bunt to his fourth hit of the game. Stroud, next batter up lashed out a single to centre field.

Bridgeman raced all the way to third, slowed down and failed to stretch it to the plate. He was neatly trapped and the game was over.

The Petes scored two in the third on Edgar's double and Jubenville's triple. Flyers evened the count in the fourth on Bridgeman's hit and three Petes errors. The visiting infield threw the ball wildly on three occasions and two Flyers scampered home.

Trenton Flyers' three hits in the sixth when Bridgeman, Whitehill and Mackness connected safely with Whitman driving in the tying run. Peterborough fourth down and struck out two to end the rally.

Petes got a one-run lead in the seventh when two Flyer errors and a long hit by Green two runs. Flyers tied it up in their half of the best and the game was over.

Bridgeman, Flyer shortstop was the hero of the batting piece, getting four for four. Edgar's three-bagger "Jubes" attack with a trio of clouts, "Lefty" Whitman's sparkling pitching effort, and an engineered double-play were the batting highlights of the game.

New Search Starts For Missing Plane

Vancouver, Aug. 3 (CP)— A new search in the Strait of Georgia for the Trans-Canada Air Lines plane which vanished April 28 with 15 persons aboard was under way today, inspired by two reports from Prevost Island about 50 miles south of Vancouver.

One report was the story of a five-year-old boy who said he saw an aircraft hit the water off Portlock Point lighthouse the night the plane disappeared. A report from the lighthouse said the child kept repeating "The plane's in the water."

Another report, now being investigated by the Royal Canadian Navy frigate Antigonish, came from two amateur draggers who said they snagged what they believed was the wreck of the plane.

CHIPS

OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE E. CARTER, Sports Editor.

A fickle weather man fired two volleys into baseball's midsummer holiday meeting last night, one of which almost ruined the closely-watched Trenton-Peterborough game over a boiling deluge which at the height of the storm was plenty of water-sunshine between the two parks. Oh, Sal's right on the job, he can see us now, you can't fool Sal, Sal's all right, Sal's the fella and the family had one of the best fourteen in years of it.

This city was invaded by a friendly host of newsmen on the occasion of the tournament for the Corbin Gold Trophy. Favorites were by the board as the lawn kaglers from outside points captured the main trophies. The Gold Cup this year will rest in Prescott in care of Skip Alderman . . . Douglas Laporte. Second was W. W. Jefferson, Petersburg; third Harry Eladon, Lindsay; fourth Paul Rouleau, Cornwall and fifth E. Krantz, Ayr, last year's Gold Trophy winner. . . .

Belleville's bowling banner was carried high by Edgar Ernie Varner and Clarence Clapp who won the twogames-total of the tournament respectively. The tournament was one of the best seen here in years due to the perfect weather and ideal conditions, and as usual the visiting kitty-hawks went home last the best praised Belleville hospitality and friendliness. . . .

Over Picton way, ten thousand speedboat addicts gathered under a hot August sun in Vandusens Cove and other points of vantage to watch the helmeted hellions of the waterways speed to two new world's records and a new Canadian mark. The course was perfect, according to the drivers and marks were shattered with more or less ease. . . .

Popular Bob Bobie, Brooklyn's flame-scarred air hero, drove his scarlet meteor "Hills It" over the five mile course to take the coveted Prince Edward Gold Cup from a starry field of drivers including "Pops" Cooper, veteran winner of the event, and Gib Bradfield who took maker honours at the Picton and Wellsville affairs in 1936. Bogie had exhaust trouble in the second heat, his engine caught fire, but he finished in fourth and went on to take the 3rd heat. He amassed enough points to cop the trophy for his third major win on the Canadian speed boat racing circuit. . . .

Mervyn Collver, Dayton, Ohio, had the spectators agog with his daring driving and reckless speed. He established a new Canadian record for 135 cubic inch class over a measured mile course in the morning, and weather and course conditions proving perfect in the afternoon he set out to better the mark of 72.575 he established earlier in the day.

And he not only put a new Canadian mark in the record books in his graft when Old Man disaster stepped into the picture. Coliver's motor "Doodle" a flaming meteor streaking across the water like flashlet while in the August moments, exploded and burned the entire boat and all the equipment with it. Collver was saved from serious injury when his boat suddenly exploded, hurling the driver clear into the water. The accident was done but Collver was not able to return to the boat. . . .

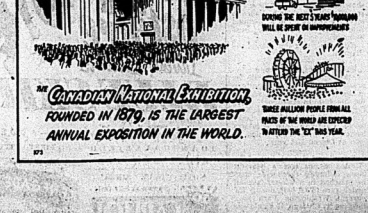
Two world records went by the board, both were established by a darter lady driver, Mrs. Franklin Poulitz, of Exeter, Maryland. "Fleeting" husband's Class D racing runabout "Sesana VIII" over the measured mile course in the morning, Mrs. Poulitz set a new world mark of 60.8 miles per hour. In the afternoon the lady speedster broke the new five-mile course mark of 57.15hs miles per hour. . . .

Peterborough Marines and Trenton RCAF Flyers battled to a four-all draw on the Exhibition Grounds under the arcs last night before a large bellicose crowd. Both squads kicked the ball around at times in some loose fielding with the Petes handing the Flyers a couple of goodwill runs when they contributed three errors in a row in the fourth innings. Flyers had to get almost in the bag on their half of the ninth when Bridgeman tried to pick a runner off the base plate and was promptly trapped. Edgar and McTaggart, starting hurlers for the Petes and Flyers respectively threw their shut ball. Whitehill, the ace flinger, went in in the eighth and was touched for two safeties in the last innings. . . .

There was some disappointment on the part of the crowd when the crews decided to call it an evening at the end of the ninth with the count tied. The boys could have played another inning at least in an effort to break the deadlock, but no soap and it ended even-stephen. A lucky draw ticket for a suit of clothes was held by George Avery, 90 Dundas Street East. His ball—ticket No:1734. The draw was made by Eddie Murphy, popular pilot of the Petes. . . .

Frank Sedore's Point Anne Leafs took the first round of the softball bout in Intermediate "A" ranks last night defeating the C.N.R. Veterans 7-4 in a well-played tilt on the Petes Park. Two plenty of cleats with Vets getting to Don Boyle for nine and Johnny Bawden being nicked for fourteen. All the damage was done in the fifth and sixth innings as for as Vets concerned when the Leafs bunched six hits for seven runs, four in the 5th and 3 in the 6th. Vets got the point the Vets were riding along on a two-run lead for first slot in the City Commercial Softball League by drubbing the softdrinkers 9-5 in a free-clouting game. Dey-Dey got out a home run triple for the losers with Bell and Burley contributing four-sackers for the Garage crew.

Tonight at the Alemite Field Swaces take on the Latta crew in a postponed game at 6.30 while tomorrow night another C.C.S.L. game is slated to be set forth at the Fair Grounds. Flyers edged the Shoemen 2-1 in one of the best games of the season at their last meeting and the Shoemen are out for revenge that defeat. Both teams will be at full strength.



Kiwanis Juniors will meet the classy Kingston baseball nine in the first round of the Ontario Baseball Association on August 16 at the Fair Grounds here, according to playdown statistics released today by O.B.A. Secretary Bill Snyder. Ken Collins and Erale Summers will represent the O.B.A. here along with Robert, Nesbitt. . . .

In the Junior "B" series the Canadian Legion will journey to Wellington to clash with the village nine in the first game date. Bancroft draws a bye. Jack Ivenuts "B" Bancroft tangles with Napanee on August 16 Napanee All Stars meet Belleville will be a best two-of-three, unless otherwise agreed on between the teams and the O.B.A. Games postponed owing to weather conditions or its games should be played the next day or at the earliest date possible following such postponement.

Doug Laporte's Rink, Prescott, Winner of Corbin Gold Cup In Tourney at Local Greens

Weather Ideal, Large Crowd on Hand and Play Exceptionally Keen in Every Round

Playing consistently throughout the three games, Alderman Douglas LaPorte of Prescott with W. Werte, M. Taylor and A. Place won the Corbin Gold Cup and the accompanying cabinets of silver at the fifth annual bowling tournament staged at the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club on Civic Holiday. This competition was instituted through the efforts of Cliff Argue, the energetic general chairman of the committee some six years ago and yesterday showed it is one of the most sought after trophies in the bowling season as rinks from all over Ontario and the United States were in attendance to capture some of the valuable prizes that were offered.

The weather was ideal, 64 rinks, a full entry, were on hand and the competition was exceptionally keen throughout the play, which ended shortly after midnight. The tournament was away to a good start when His Worship Frank Follwell welcomed the guests and hoped for all a real good time in the "Friendliest City in Canada." Elgin Ford, president of the local club explained the history of the Corbin Tournament and hoped for all keen bowling. The greens were in exceptionally fine condition, and the bunting placed at vantage points only added to the beauty of the scene as Cliff Argue explained the rules and asked co-operation of the bowlers in keeping the games to schedule. Many of the wives of the bowlers accompanied their husbands and the lawns presented a very beautiful sight as the play got under way. Mr. Hazzlewood, president of the Lawn Bowling Association brought greetings of the parent organization before play commence.

Every Comfort Arranged

Every comfort was arranged for the guests present. The women members of the club worked very hard during the day in providing refreshments and meals for the bowlers between their games. The play was very keen in every round and the Belleville rinks of which there were five in the tourney received a share of the prizes that were offered. Most of the rinks that come to the tournament are "plugged" with the best players of their respective clubs and rinks have to be awfully strong to collect a part of the prize money and the showing the the Belleville contingent was very good. At the conclusion of the play, Elgin Ford, Cliff Argue and members of the club helped to distribute the prizes.

As already stated Mr. LaPorte and his rink from Prescott had the high three-game score of the tournament while Bill Jeffries of Peterborough, an Sid Eldsen of Lindsay tied for second place. A coin was flipped and Mr. Jeffries won the toss. Incidentally this is the second time these two players have tossed at tournaments this year. Mr. Jeffries won the Riggs' Cup and four silver trays sponsored by the Bellexille Sargent Company Limited with a rink of Ron Knox, Bert Jeffries and Bob Gamble. Sid Eldsen with Harold Dickie, Charles Moase and Bert Everson won the four sets of dishes and the Ritchie Cup sponsored by the Association of Hotel Proprietors. Paul Rouleau the rollicking Frenchman from Cornwall with Charles Julien, A. W. Jackson and Roland Pearson won the four bridge sets sponsored by the Bata Shoe Company.

Winner Last Year

In the fifth place was E. C. Krantz of Ayr, who was the winner of the Corbin Cup last year and with J. H. Grimmer, I. R. Hall, and Dr. J. H. Caulfield won four candelabra sponsored by the Mead Johnson Company of Canada. A rink from Runnymede Club in Toronto composed of Dr. Johnson, Bill Seigner, Ken Ashton and K. W. MacDonald as skip won four silver dishes sponsored by the Stephens-Adamson Company. Four pair of sport trousers sponsored by the Tip Top Tailoring Company went to W. S. Boyd, Fred Stoate, Frank Hupp and Frank Corcoran of Central Bowling Club, Ottawa, the last three-game high winner was W. Fenton, E. H. Coon, George Davis and I. J. Young of High Park, Toronto, who won four windbreakers sponsored by the Deacon Brothers of this city.

A Belleville rink of Herb Middleton, Wilfrid Price, John Shaw and Ernie Vanner as skip won the two game high and each received a Kenwood blanket, sponsored by the J. and J. Cash Company. The one game high winner was also a Belleville rink composed of Ray Zufelt, Colonel Bonisteel, Doug Row and Clarence Clapp as skip and each received a pair of sun glasses sponsored by the American Optical Company. A rink of M. Booth, T. W. Neilson, T. Neilson and T. McCallum from Windsor won four inner tubes sponsored by Seiberling Tire Service for coming the longest distance, while Mrs. Argue made the lucky draw and George Gimblett of Peterborough and his rink won the four casseroles from the Stroud's Gift Shop.

BATTING AND PITCHING STARS

(By The Associated Press)

Batting—Dixie Walker, Dodgers and Sam Chapman, Athletics: Walker smashed two-run homer in 10th inning to enable Dodgers to nip Boston, 4-2. Chapman drove in three runs and scored three on a triple and two singles to lead Philadelphia to a 9-5 victory over New York.

Pitching—Hugh Casey, Dodgers, allowed only two hits after relieving Vic Lombardi in sixth inning of Brooklyn's 4-2 10-inning conquest of Boston to gain credit for his eighth victory.

Around the "Kitty"

Belleville rinks did not fare too well in the first draw, only one winning out of the five competing and that one happened to be L. E. McLean and his rink of Pat Drumm, John Bean and Howard Hanton and incidentally it was the Corbin Lock Company rink after which the primary trophy was named. They defeated a rink from Verdun, Que.

Archie Murdoch who entered a rink from Buffalo, N.Y. and had as his players Jim Graham, Tommy Caton, and Harry Thompson of this club, defeated a Stirling rink skipped by "Hap" Tompkins of the Stirling News Argus. It was whispered around the clubhouse that Dr. Carleton was not up to his usual standard.

Ray Zufelt, Colonel Bonisteel, Doug Row and Clarence Clapp ran into a Tartar in Ted Green of Kingston. The local rink however scored a seven-ender which is one short of the limit but even this only put them back in the game for a short time.

Fred Harper with Jerry Hyde, Gordon and Austin Watkin had tough luck in their game. Fred was sitting pretty against Herbert of Ottawa being four up with two ends to play, but the Ottawa crew secured a three-ender and then got the single count to tie it up and on the extra end scored the needed point.

The women of the Belleville club certainly deserve a grand hand. They worked like beavers, provided an excellent meal, courteous service and otherwise helped to make the day the grand success it was.

Wilfrid Price, Herb Middleton, John Shaw and Ernie Vanner as skip went down before a Toronto rink by nine shots, while Joe Legault, Gordon Edwards, George Pauley and Ab Wonnacott took a lacing from Sid Eldsen of Lindsay.

The "Spider" competition was won by Jimmy Smith of Ottawa. This is really the fun of the tournament. The Jack is placed in the centre of the green and all bowlers competing throw one ball from any location around the greens. The one bowl nearest the "Jack" is the winner. It is a great sight to watch nearly 200 bowls converging on one lonely "Kitty."

A large number of women accompanied their husbands to the tournament and enjoyed the day visiting and sitting in the shade of the large elms at the end of the greens. It was truly a fine day for the lady visitors and they were thoroughly welcomed by the members of the Belleville Club.

Local rinks fared much better in the second draw. Mac McLean with his Corbin rink kept in the running by winning his second game 16-1 from Fernie of Verdun, Que. Harper also defeated a Verdun rink 22-10 while Ernie Vanner took Smith of Kingston 22-6. Wonnacott was tied with 17-17 and won the extra end. Clapp lost to Coleman of Peterborough by one shot. He needed three coming home but failed by one to tie. Archie Murdoch of Buffalo with his local players lost to Paul Rouleau off Cornwall by six shots.

In the third game, Harper lost to Taylor by a 17-10 count while Vanner defeated the Buffalo rink by 22-5 to put him in the money. McLean lost to Krantz of Ayr, last year's winners of the Corbin Gold Cup while Wonnacott was beaten in an extra end by Matheson of Havelock. Clapp defeated Reg Dallyn of Brockville in the nightcap game.

Thanks for the running of the tournament is due the genial general chairman of the committee, Cliff Argue. This hardworking official conducted the draw, saw the games were played on schedule and otherwise was the master mind of the whole party. His work is not only on tournament day, but throughout the year and the big day is largely due to his untiring efforts.

Coupled with this was the work of the President of the club, Elgin Ford, who did not bowl but was around and about all day seeing that the visitors were afforded every comfort possible. Elgin has been a fine President and hard worker for the club.

Jack Bush, proprietor of the Belleville Burial Company, also provided for some of the comforts of the guests, by donating for use some 150 chairs. The ladies used these extensively by placing them in vantage points around the green to watch the interesting play. It was a fine gesture on the part of Jack and the club appreciates the interest in their behalf.

Kenneth-Katan Rematched, Fri., New Referee

"A different referee, just give me a different refere that's all I ask." That's the reiterated shout of Ken Kenneth the New Zealand wrestling champion after he lost a referee's decision to John Katan here last week. Kenneth's request was forwarded to the Ontario Athletic Commission and the re-match is on. Katan and his blond opponent will meet here Friday night and there will be no time limit to the match.

The new conditions were agreed to by both big men for although Katan came out of the match somewhat the worse for wear, he still believes that Referee Powers was "absolutely right in awarding me the decision." Powers based his judgment on what he claims was Katan's early lead during the first half of the match in which the Palermo Panther did pile up a lot of points. But it was Kenneth's closing drive and his wonderful condition that made the fans feel that the New Zealander had the edge at the bell. And Kenneth himself is supremely confident that in next Friday's match with no time limit he can finally give Katan his "come-uppance."

The new referee (the Athletic Commissions will appoint him during the next few days) will handle all the matches on Friday's card. The semi-final bout will have Strangler Bob Wagner meeting Mike Sharpe the bigger of the two sensational Sharpe brothers of Hamilton. That one should be a "tear-up". Two Irishmen, Pat Flanagan and Dan O'Connor meet in the opening match.

YESTERDAY'S STARS

(By The Associated Press)

Enos Slaughter, Cardinals — Singled in three official trips to the plate and scored two runs in Cards' 8-1 victory over Chicago.

Ted Williams, Walker Cooper, Lou Boudreau and Joe Dimaggio did not play.

Brooklyn Idol Since 1939 Player Homers in Tenth With One On for Win

By RALPH RODEN
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Dixie Walker, Brooklyn Dodger idol since 1939, Monday broke up the Dodgers' game with the Braves in Boston by homering with one on in the 10th inning for a 4-2 triumph. The circuit clout was the 100th of his major league career.

Pitcher Hugh Casey, who will be 34 in October, received credit for the victory, his eighth of the season against three setbacks. The hefty righthander entered the game in the sixth after the Braves had tied the score at 2-2 and stopped the Bostonians on two safeties the rest of the way.

St. Louis Cardinals hung up their fourth straight triumph, drubbing the Chicago Cubs, 8-1, in a day game at Chicago.

Lefty Howie Pollet scattered 10 hits while the Red Birds collected 17 off five Chicago pitchers, including a homer, double and single by Stan Musial.

The loss ended a three-game Chicago winning streak and also dropped the Cubs a game and a half behind the fourth-place Cincinnati Reds who took a 7-4 decision from the Pirates in a night game at Pittsburgh.

Walters Wins Game

Eddie Lukon and Grady Hatton each cracked a two-run homer to lead the Reds to victory. Bucky Walters started for the Reds and received credit for the win. Heat and fatigue forced Walters to retire in favor of Harry Gumbert in the seventh.

Meanwhile Philadelphia Athletics outslugged New York Yankees 9-5 in a night game at Yankee Stadium.

Trailing 4-3 going into the 5th, the A's batted around and scored five runs to win going away. Young Carl Scheib, who relieved starter Bill Dietrich in the second, yielded only two runs the rest of the way and received credit for the win while another youngster, Don Johnson, who took over for Randy Gumbert in the first, was charged with the loss.

Sam Chapman paced the Athletics' 14-hit attack by driving in three runs and scoring three on a triple and two singles.

The second-place Boston Red Sox, along with the rest of the American League and the New York Giants and the Philadelphia Phillies in the National were idle.

Sports Roundup

By JOSEPH B. KELLEY
(Pinch Hitting for Hugh Fullerton Jr.)

Boston, Aug. 5 (AP)—Becoming more discouraged daily over his sore pitching arm, pitcher Johnny Beazley of Boston Braves hopes the "general who ordered me to pitch in Hawaii feels better than I do."

Johnny, who has been to all kinds of doctors and has had all kinds of injections, didn't even make the last trip with Boston. His trouble, he says, stems from a pitching assignment by a general who disregarded the former Cardinal's plea that he wasn't in shape. He has a 2-0 record in 24 innings of work.

Which reminds that the Braves, long noted as a team more dependent upon pitching and fielding finesse, now have one of the heaviest hitting teams in the majors with an over-all batting average in the .280s. The club has whacked 172 doubles, more than the total two-base output for the 1946 season.

Suffolk Downs Fun

Just before Stymie won the 13th running of the Massachusetts Handicap a 50-piece band struck up Harvard's "Up the Street" march. A press box was turned to the Boston Globe's 290-pound Vern Miller, recent Harvard tackle and quipped, "bet most of these 28048 sweltering spectators think you're going to ride Stymie." Miller laughed and after the race retorted "Stymie could have won with me up."

Fight Gossip

Subway Sam Silverman, New England's most successful fight promoter in years, hopes to book Rocky Graziano, New York's dead end kid who recently flattened Tony Zale for the middleweight crown. The Massachusetts Boxing Commission is non-committal about the Rock's New York State suspension, a spokesman explaining, "Graziano never has applied for a state licence. We can't tell what we'll do until he applies."

Chapter 17

Monty said it casually; Christy looked at him in amazement. She had not remembered him as so keen an analyst of new faces and stories.

"I don't suppose they want to 'get loose,'" his mother said on a faintly protesting note. "Her husband died before she married Fortesque of course?"

"I think they're boring each other to death," Monty observed calmly. "Gurney Hill like 'em?" he asked unexpectedly.

"Well, no I'd say not. Gurney Hill hasn't seen much of them, for one thing," Christy answered hesitantly.

"And they're going away?"

"I think so. Lin — Mr. Devereaux is going tonight."

"So he said. Did he fall in love with you Christy?"

"Silly talk," Mrs. Blount said disapprovingly.

"I know it is mother, but when he looks at Christy there's a sort of intensity — or I imagine it— or anway— that's all of that. Besides, everyone does."

"I'm going to brush my hair, I'll be down in two seconds," Christy presently said. She was crossing the hall when the telephone rang. With her heart thundering she took up the receiver; it was Norman speaking.

"Christy? Can I talk?"

Her voice was low; her words swift.

"Yes, but quick."

"Did you see that the Milo woman died? Radio just had it. That means they charge him with murder."

"I know," Christy said, with a dry mouth.

"That may mean trouble for you. What Fairleigh and I want to know is how much we let you down if we cut it."

"You mean —" A pause. "You mean go away?" Christy asked.

"Well, we've got a chance to stay a few days in Los Angeles, and then beat it for New York. Fairleigh's going to stay for awhile with friends in Baltimore and I'm going to get back to Paris as soon as I can."

"Fairleigh isn't going with you?" It all confirmed what Lin had said, what Monty had so instantly surmised; Christy's heart felt sick.

"Not for awhile." The tone was guarded, cryptic.

It was in a voice that sounded to herself years older than her own that Christy said, "I'll see you again. But if I don't—goodbye and thanks."

"Oh, this isn't goodbye," Norman assured her. "But if it should be, I'll see you one of these in Paris. This isn't sudden, really. You knew that we were going away."

Anger, contempt, shock steeled her voice.

"Of course, Norman."

"You do understand?"

"Of course."

"I mean — we'd do no good here, we weren't in it. And we don't belong, see what I mean? We've already told McCauley that we meant to go up to the cabin and couldn't make it, and that lets us out, I suppose. Well, cheerio and good luck. By the way, we're all crazy about that man of yours. Some dynamo. Fairleigh said she felt as if a great green wave had washed over the room and left us all hanging to the rigging. Grand guy. Bring him up to lunch tomorrow. We'll be packing, but who cares! Henny'll scare us up something."

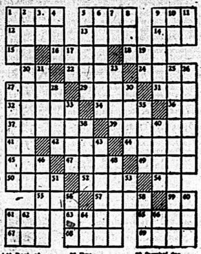
"I will if I'm not in jail," Christy thought bitterly, as with a vague "maybe," she ended the conversation. She went back to the others, at the fire, just as Anna announced dinner.

"Who was that?" asked the older Mrs. Blount.

"That was —just Joe Polk, of the newspaper, asking if it was true that Monty was back." The fabrication came easily; she would have to do a lot of this now.

"I thought it was the everlasting Fortesques," her mother-in-law said, with an air of amused tolerance." Christy had to see them everyday," she added, for Monty's benefit.

"Her letters have been full of 'em. Well, they're Christy's sort," Monty said, eyeing the soup tureen with satisfaction. "Room full of books, piano, good talk, and the woman that Mrs. Fortesque, must have been a great beauty. She's beautiful now when Christy isn't around."



The man of the house was home again, no question of that. Monty would linger by the fire only a short while after dinner, then he pleaded the need of a bath and a long night's rest.

Saturday's Puzzle Solved:

Little Benny's Note Book

I was downtown with ma, and she left me at pop's office so she could do the rest of her shopping with her hands free, and pop said, Yee gods, Benny, you look more like a son of a mop than a son of mine.

Meening my hair, and I said, G, pop, I must of forgot to go to the barbers again.

Then here's an easy chance to remedy a difficult situation, pop said. Take the elevater down to the barber shop and get that crop harvested rite now.

And he handed me a doller, saying, In my young days, when a boy went to the barber shop with a doller, he came home with a pocketfull of change, but now a man doesn't get anything back but the boy, for which of course I wouldn't want to be said that I'm not properly gratefull.

Giving me a good idea, and I said, Well G, pop, if there's any change, can I keep it? I meen suppose there just happens to be some? I said, and pop said, If there is, it's all yours, but dont raise your hopes too high.

And I went down in the elevater, and when I went back to pop's office I kept my cap on, and pop said, Well, let's have a look at my doller's werth.

And he pulled off my cap, saying, For Peet sake, did you go to a barber shop or a threshing machine? and I said, Well G. pop, you didn't say what barber shop to go to after I got out of the elevater, so I went 3 blocks to the barber school, and three different barbers took terns at me, and I've got 85 cents change and you said I could keep it, pop.

Yee gods, that's the last time I talk without thinking, where money is concerned, pop said, and I said, Sure, pop, G, maybe this whole thing will help you in your bizzness.

The result being pop took me down to the barber shop on the bottom floor and watched the barber trying to make me look better.

NEWARK BEARS MOVING TOWARD PLAYOFF BERTH

Lot of Credit Belongs to Dick Starr, Youthful Right-hander of Club

(By The Associated Press)

Newark Bears are slowly moving toward a first division berth in the International League pennant race and a lot of credit belongs to Dick Starr, youthful right-hander, who has won eight games and lost two for the Bears, seven of the victories coming since June 25.

The 25-year-old pitcher property of New York Yankees, scored his latest triumph last night when he pitched the Bears to a 4-2 win over Rochester Red Wings.

The Wings nicked Starr for both their runs after two were out in the first inning. After that, Starr allowed only three hits.

Jersey City pulled to within 3½ games of the pace-setting Montreal Royals by defeating the fourth-place Buffalo Bisons 2-1 for their seventh straight win while the Royals divided a doubleheader with third place Syracuse.

After veteran Ed Heusser of Montreal blanked the Chiefs 1-0 in the seven-inning opener, the Chiefs came back to take the nightcap 6-5.

Heusser's win was his 11th in a row and his 14th of the year as against one setback. Ed Stevens singled home Earl Naylor with the winning run in the third inning.

The last-place Baltimore Orioles divided a twin bill with Richmond, scoring two runs in the opener and dropping the finale 6-4.

George Staller broke up the first game with a three-run ninth inning homer while two-run four-baggers by Len Koenecke and Tim Harrington in the fifth inning enabled Jack Thompson to gain the verdict in the second encounter.

GALT RUNNER WINS MARATHON

Guelph, Aug. 5—(AP)—Ab Morton of Galt yesterday won the annual Guelph Marathon, running the 26 miles in three hours, 10 minutes and 15 seconds. Scotty Rankine of Preston pulled in second 26 seconds later.

A merciless sun reduced the starting field of 30 to seven at the finish when two portions of the run over gravel roads proved a gruelling for many. Norm Tieck of Hamilton ended in third place.

Rankine and Morton continued side by side until near the 18-mile mark when the Galt plodder forged into the lead.

POLICE TEST HOOP GAME

Toronto, Aug. 5—(CP)—Mayor Bob Saunders, who knows a crooked midway game when he sees one, is after another crooked operator. The Mayor, who closed up a fish pond game three weeks ago at Sunnyside amusement park when none of the tin fishes in the pond held the numbers for big prizes, told morality officers yesterday.

Police found the thrown hoops would fit nearly over pedestals holding small prizes but not over big ones. Now the operators case comes up before the police commission Thursday.

NEW DUTIES

Although India has now got her much sought after partition, it is likely that a British general will command the Hindustan Indian army. Rumor has already suggested that Gen. Sir William Slim, former commander of the 14th Army, of Burma fame, is likely to be the commander-in-chief.

KIWANIS JUNIORS WIN TWO GAMES OVER HOLIDAY

Defeat Smiths Falls and Lanark "All-Stars" in Tour of Eastern Ontario

The Kiwanis Juniors traked to Lanark Monday and copped both ends of a doubleheader 7-1 and 8-5. In the first game they traded with a Smiths Falls nine, and in the second game they met the Lanark "All Stars," a selected team from the Lanark County League.

The Juniors opened the scoring in the first game when Bob Dent scored in the second inning for a lone tally. In the third inning the Junior bats came to life as Dent, Reeves and Green hit singles and Gord Donovan hit a double, pepper-ing Rankin and Morton. Green for two of the three runs garnered in that frame. The Kiwanis lads got two more runs in the fifth inning on three hits and a wild pitch that hit Bud Green. They added their scoring in the eighth when Verv Green hit a mighty home run into deep centre field with no one on base.

The Smiths Falls Juniors got one run in the third inning on two hits and another run in the fourth on one hit and six passed balls. They completed their scoring in the fifth when Rankin walked and McShane brought him around with a home run over the right field fence.

Bunton Goes Well

Bunton went the distance for the winners, striking out twelve, walking three and allowing only five hits for four runs. The Smiths Falls ace used two pitchers in a vain attempt to halt the Juniors. Cole, starting pitcher, struck out five, walked two, and gave up ten hits, in five innings for six runs. He was relieved by White in the sixth inning who struck out seven, walked none and gave up three hits for one run for the last four innings. The lineup:

Smiths Falls: Watkins 2b; Halpin 3b; Wright lf; McShane ss; White cf; Smith as; Cole, relieved by White in the sixth, p; Steen-burn 1b; Graham c.

Belleville: V. Green c; Galbraith rf; Bush ss; Bunton p; Reeves 3b; B. Green cf; Donovan 2b; Lock-yer lb; Straban relieved by Wright in the seventh, lf.

Score by innings:

Smiths Falls	001	100	020—4
Kiwanis	013	020	010—7

Second Game

After a rest of half an hour the players returned to the field for the second game of the doubleheader against the Lanark All Stars.

Bud Green led off the scoring for the Juniors in the second game with a second inning double. He came home on two long flies to the outfield. In the third inning George Reeves hit a four hundred foot home run with Bush to count two runs.

In the fifth inning there was a disputed play about an infield fly. Bud Reeves got on base on a hit. Bud Green walked and then Brad Soules hit an infield fly to the left fielder who relayed the ball to the third baseman to catch Reeves coming down from second. The third baseman touched the bag and the base umpire called the runner out. Reeves did not stop but ran on home and claimed a run.

The plate umpire ruled that Soules was automatically out on his fly ball and that the play at third was not forced. Therefore the third baseman should have touched the runner and since he failed to do so the run counted. Two bases on balls and one hit gave the Juniors two more runs in the sixth.

The "All Stars" scored their lone tally in the third inning on three hits. Wright bore down with

Wright Goes Distance

Art Wright went the distance for the Juniors striking out eight, walking none, and giving up five hits for one run. Barr pitched three innings for the "All Stars" striking out three and giving up four hits for three runs. E. Boyd finished for the All Stars whiffing two, walking three, and allowing two hits for three runs.

The lineup:

"All Stars": A. Bingley cf; Paul 1b; E. Boyd 2b; D. Cameron lf; O. Rathwell rf; A. Christie c; V. Bingley ss; McNichol 3b; Barr relieved by Boyd in the fourth, p.

Kiwanis: V. Green c; Donovan 2b; Bush ss; Bunton, relieved by Semark in the fifth, lf; Reeves 3b; B. Green cf; Soules rf; Lockyer 1b; Wright p.

After the game the Lanark Ladies' Aid served a supper in the Agricultural hall for the members and associates, of the three teams which took part in the afternoon's play.

At 8.30 p.m. a dance was held in the town hall and all the players were invited to attend. Refreshments were served at the dance.

It was a grand day for baseball and the Lanark people treated the visitors from Belleville royally. Their hospitality received accolades all the way home. They make it a pleasure for visiting teams to go there and play ball.

Bill Warren, Bill Norris, Lum Carson and "Speedy" St. Louis provided the transportation for the Belleville team to and from Lanark.

Capt. F. S. Ritchie of Toronto and Sgt. J. P. Guay of Ottawa, fired perfect scores of 50 to tie for first place in the City of Hamilton Tyro event at the opening of 66th Annual Ontario Rifle Association meet at Long Branch and will shoot off for top honors today.

Two Firefighters Hurt in $250,000 Blaze at Ottawa

Ottawa, Aug. 6 (CP)—Damage was still being counted up today from a three-alarm fire which swept through a four-storey block in downtown Ottawa, injuring two firemen, almost taking the life of another through electrocution and putting a halt for hours on more businesses out of operation.

Damage to a restaurant, where the blaze began, a sandwich shop, a fur store, an electrical shop, and a business college and other offices on the upper floors of the fifty-seventh Building at downtown Sparks and O'Connor Streets had not been estimated. But fire authorities said the loss probably would be more than $250,000.

The fire, biggest in Ottawa in several months, broke out when a pot of grease boiled over on an oil stove in the kitchen of the Tea Garden restaurant. Flames quickly raced up a flue to the roof and along a service entrance to O'Connor Street, setting afire the rear of stores in other parts of the building and into the sandwich shop on O'Connor.

"The flames already had reached the roof," said Fire Chief Carter, and two more alarms were turned in. Extra police rushed to the scene to rope off the streets and hold thousands attracted by the commotion. Glass and debris poured from the building.

Electric cables in the darkened hand lamps and Fireman Percy Slater when the fire was controlled. Fireman Albert Carl Armstrong was knocked unconscious when he grabbed a live wire carrying 250 volts. He was pulled free of the wire by fellow members and taken to hospital where his condition was described as satisfactory. Authorities said only his rubber boots and coat saved him from electrocution.

Fireman Nick Ostapyk suffered hand burns and Fireman Percy Reid a deep gash on the bridge of the nose while fighting the flames which broke through the tar-covered roof of the building. A number of firemen were treated for smoke-sickness at the fire department's emergency truck which set up a first aid post at the fire scene.

Heat Wave Gripping Ontario Expected To Break in Southern Part Thursday

(By The Canadian Press)

Cooler air advancing from the northwest into the White River and western James Bay regions early today brought a promise of a break in the heat wave which has gripped Ontario and Quebec for the last two days.

In the west, the break had already come last night with most temperatures plunging 20 degrees or more. Cool air over Alberta's Rockies registered the lowest August reading in years, 34 degrees above freezing 32.

Today brought a promise of spread across all of Northern Ontario by tonight and extend to Southern Ontario by Thursday.

With temperatures in the high 80's, Eastern Canada welcomed the prospect. There was some prospect of the cool wave heating up slightly as it advanced east. High temperatures predicted for today for western points were in the 60s and 70s but Ontario and Quebec could look for no relief from the heat until tomorrow.

Winnipeg, Saskatchewan and Alberta followed high temperatures that included official marks of 94 degrees at Regina and 91 at Winnipeg.

Little relief was expected for the Maritimes where temperatures jumped over 90 in many parts of New Brunswick Thursday and remained in the high 80s around Moncton and Saint John.

The weather bureau at Halifax said, "No immediate relief is in sight, remain the same or climb slightly today.

AIR-IMMIGRANT GROUP ANXIOUS TO SECURE HOMES

34 Men and 6 Women In Second Contingent To Arrive in Canada By Airliner

By FRED KERNER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Aug. 6 — (CP) — At least nine of the 40 British immigrants who set foot on Ontario soil at Malton airport yesterday plan settling up homes in the province and bringing out the balance of their families.

Among the 34 men and six women who arrived on the second flight of immigrants by air schemes operated by the provincial government were three groups who plan on making homes for their families, and two of the near future.

Nonamen, who entered the picture and at least three of the Britishers admitted they were going to their affianced or to "almost engaged" persons in the province of the province. Bringing to 79 the total of immigrants now come to Canada by air, the 40 arrivals were a happy lot as they stepped off the new Canadian Pacific Airlines plane.

The Sullivan brothers — 22-year-old Owen and Patrick, 33 — are well on their way to getting started in the building trade. The husky London lads are going to their sister, Mrs. Ivy Bonefant, of Fort Erie and already have promise of jobs in the building trade. Mrs. Bonefant was a war bride little more than a year ago, two of sixteen of their parents remain in England.

Three girls and their brother, all in the early 20s, are with the second of the Newman family to Canada. Mrs. Goodmayes, Essex, who are heading for Toronto where they have a home for their parents' Brother Walter, who is 25, said he came to Canada to see if there was any better opportunities for himself and her sisters, Elsie, 22, and Irene, 20.

In Canada Before

The third family group are returning to Canada after a previous one-year stay from 1933 to 1934. Father Edward Raby, 47, and sons Patrick, 20, and Edward, 18, are heading to the London district where they have worked on a farm before. Soon to follow by boat are Mrs. Raby, a young son and daughter, and a married son with his wife.

Donald Rowland, a 24-year-old flitter who'd like to try his hand at farming, is headed for Hamilton with the fiancee he met for the first time here last month — Ida Gordon (Miss, Carrick Ave.). Rowland's courtship of Miss Gordon, however, was not by the proposal, he said, was made by Ida's friend who now lives in Hamilton.

Pretty Vera Dalton, dressed in a smart red suit, blushingly admitted that it was "Norman" who was waiting for her who would not give — that she was headed for Ottawa where Norman is likely to work as a waitress. And Phyllis Collett of Aurora is to receive a marriage proposal from handsome Eric Edgerton, who met her while she was vacationing in England in 1938.

Third Group Thursday

Stationed with the R. A. F. at Calgary for 2½ years was enough to sell 20-year-old Ken Bond on the idea of coming back to Canada and he's off to visit his fiancee in Fort Erie before he settles down. Gatlinfd Rashleigh, 30, on his way to Toronto, has rines to see friends and hopes to get an interest in a farm.

Pretty Dorothy Blankley, 22, plans on working as a nurse in Toronto and Mrs. H. Harris of Windsor, and James C. McGillo, 23 of Ayr, to visit friends in Port Halliday at Windsor before trying to find a farm themselves.

Thomas J. Welburn, 34, who spent 10 years in the R. A. F., is part of that line as an instructor at St. Thomas, Ont. — is heading to see a former friend from England, Dan Bell, while tiny Miss Margaret Cody, 36, may head for Woodstock where she knows Mrs. J. Cresswell of nearby Norwich.

Third group of immigrants-by-air will arrive in Toronto Thursday, immigration officials said.

SMOTHERED NEAR SAFETY

Toronto, Aug. 6 — (CP) — Mrs. Margaret Cody, 36, was only a few feet from the front door of her home and safety in the cupid air when her body was discovered in her bed last night, victim of asphyxiation by illuminating gas.

ONE LITTLE WET HEAD LOOKS MAD

The famed Benn quintuplets of Baltimore — Joan, Bruce, Donald and Thomas — are cooled off by Nurse Virginia McCormick on grounds of St. Agnes Hospital, but Bruce seems mad about something. They were born last December to Mrs. Charles Benn, a British war bride.

DUTCH CHARGE CEASE-FIRE ORDER WAS VIOLATED

Deny Accusations Made by Indonesians That Dutch Broke Order

By STANLEY SWINTON
Batavia, Java, Aug. 6 (AP) — The Netherlands army command charged the Indonesian Republic today of violating Monday night's cease-fire order five times and at the same time denied Indonesian charges that the Dutch had committed such violations.

Indonesian Prime Minister Amir Sjarifoeddin had charged the Dutch with violating the order of Gombong, on the central front, 30 miles west of Jogjakarta, 2 1-2 hours after the midnight deadline.

The Dutch declared today, however, that they actually occupied Gombong 30 minutes before the order became effective.

Meanwhile rumors circulated in Batavia, without official confirmation, that Admiral D. Leihy would come here from Washington to act as mediator in the Dutch-Indonesian dispute if the Republican government accepts a United States offer of "good offices" as the Dutch already have.

Walter A. Foote, the United States Consul-General here, officially delivered the offer to the Indonesian Premier Prime Minister, A. K. Gani, shortly after midnight. Foote and Gani left by plane for a new nothing about the Leahy rumors.

The Indonesians earlier had asked for an international commission to mediate the dispute and supervise the cease-fire order.

Today's Dutch communique accused the Indonesians specifically of the several truce violations.

Yesterday, the Dutch said reports have been received of three Dutch soldiers killed, 12 wounded and one missing. The Indonesians made no specific whether these casualties occurred after the cease-fire deadline or were contained in delayed reports.

TORONTO LIFEGUARDS WAIT INCREASES

Toronto, Aug. 6 — (CP) — A meeting attended by 44 of the 52 lifesavers and guards employed at civic beaches last night, drafted a letter to the supervisor of lifesavers warning that they will go on strike Saturday if their claims for pay increases are not answered. The lifeguards want equal pay with Toronto Harbour supervisors who get $35 for a 44-hour week plus overtime.

Weather Synopsis

Toronto (CP) — Synopsis: Another hot humid day is the story for Ontario and, in fact, for most of Eastern Canada, and the eastern states. Cooler air from the northwest has spread eastward into Northern Ontario and the states of Minnesota and Nebraska bringing relief from the sweltering heat of the past several days. The cool air, however, has lost much of its drive. It is now expected to extend farther than the Kirkland Lake region and to the northern portions of the Georgian Bay and Haliburton regions by Thursday morning. Widely scattered thunderstorms will occur along the leading edge of this cool air.

PRIME MINISTER KING SILENT ON HIS RETIREMENT

St. Laurent Termed Most Likely Interim Successor Until New Leader Elected

By D'ARCY O'DONNELL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Aug. 6 (CP)—A source close to the government said that as far as he knew Prime Minister Mackenzie King has not told even his closest associates when he plans to resign and retire from politics.

The source was commenting on a statement made in Vancouver Monday by James Sinclair, Liberal member of the Commons for Vancouver North. Mr. Sinclair was quoted as saying in an interview that "when Mr. King, as is expected, resigns next spring, the emphasis will be on youth when his successor is chosen." Mr. Sinclair said Finance Minister Abbott, 48, was the leading contender to succeed the Prime Minister.

The statement was a "further stage" in the speculation on the future of Liberal Prime Minister, said the source. He recalled that Mr. King stated during the 1945 general election campaign and since that he would not contest another general election. The life of the present parliament expires in 1950.

During the recent session some Liberal members said they had heard that Mr. King, on his doctor's orders, would resign in September and that the Prime Ministership over to External Affairs Minister St. Laurent until a new leader could be chosen at a national convention and election.

Other members said Mr. King would resign next June when he will have surpassed the commonwealth record for a Prime Ministership established in the 18th century by Britain's Sir Robert Walpole.

Max Enscoe, Decision

A few Liberal members said there was always a possibility that their world conditions would be such that the government felt that Mr. King would feel obliged to reverse his earlier decision to retire.

The members agreed that 65-year-old St. Laurent would have full backing of the party if he, instead of Mr. King, were Prime Ministership from Mr. King until a national convention could be held in Ottawa, probably in October or November.

Several weeks it has been frequently reported that Mr. St. Laurent would return to his law practice in Quebec. Latest speculation has it that the latter part of he would leave in September.

Besides Mr. St. Laurent, who had previously mentioned as possible successors to Mr. King were Defence Minister Claxton, 58, Transport Minister Chevrier, 44, Agriculture Minister Gardiner, 63, Health Minister Martin, 44, Defence Minister Claxton, 58, Reconstruction Minister Howe, 57, and C. D. Howe, 57, and Pearson, popular Undersecretary of State for External Affairs.

Liberal members claim that at the moment "it was difficult to say" whether the candidates would fare at a national convention.

Artificial Plant in Arena Will be Completed Sept. 8th

The artificial ice plant purchased by the city last winter will be put officially in operation in Memorial Arena by September 8th, it was announced today by the Arena Committee of the city council.

The announcement followed direct communication with officials of the Canadian Ice Company, Toronto, which holds the contract for the installation of the plant.

The committee was informed by company officials that a cast-iron of piping was on its way to their headquarters in Toronto immediately on arrival it would be diverted to Belleville.

Welding employees of the company will arrive in the city at the beginning of next week, while Mr. W. Croydale, Canadian Ice Company superintendent, will be on hand Friday or Saturday.

It is estimated that the placing of the piping in the Arena is one of the most important phases of installation procedure, will be in the vicinity of three weeks to complete.

Other ice manufacturing machinery has already been installed in the Arena.

September 8th — the date of inaugural operation coincides with plans of the committee to provide artificial ice for the Belleville Juniors entry in the American Hockey League which have completed arrangements to conduct their pre-season training here for a period of a month, starting Sept. 15.

Members of the Arena Committee are Chairman Mayor Frank Follwell and Aldermen Claude Tice, Newton Walker, H. J. Clarke and Jack Allin.

H.M.C.S. Warrior, Britain-Bound, Provides Scouts With Great Adventure

On Board H.M.C.S. Warrior at sea, Aug. 6 (CP)—Churning her way across the North Atlantic today the queen of Canada's fleet, the aircraft carrier Warrior, bore with her 24 Sea Cadets and 32 Boy Scouts bound for Europe on one of the greatest adventures of their lives.

The Warrior weighed anchor Saturday at Halifax, both contingents of passengers having arrived on board the previous day. Already most of the lads have gained their sea legs, and are making the most of their six-day stay on the ship.

On their arrival on board, a major problem immediately arose when the boys were presented with hammocks. At once the Cadets made a knowing bee-line for good slinging and, leaving the bewildered Scouts to rely on willing members of the crew for aid and advice on the intricate art of staying in a hammock.

After a hapless first night during which one of the Scouts toppled from his perch four times, the boys began to get the knack of it, but there were some bruised Scouts appearing at breakfast next morning.

Sunday, the Boy Scout contingent took part in one of the navy's oldest ceremonies—Sunday divisions. Later the Scouts were inspected by Commodore H. G. De-Wolf commanding officer of the carrier and received a mark of approval from the inspecting officers for the way their appearance and groups attended devotional services.

By now the Scouts are moving about with added assurance and poise and have shed all remaining vestiges of landlubbers' landing. They are learning their first practice call to emergency stations—abandon ship—and, in a surprisingly gentle manner.

Complete, well-organized programs of instruction and training have kept the boys on the go, and they are looking forward eagerly to their arrival in England Friday, when they will undergo another metamorphosis back to the ways of landlubbers once again.

Possibility Dog Attacked by Mink In Northern Lake

Mystery surrounds the death of "Barney" a handsome eighteen months old springer spaniel, whose drowned body was found in a shallow cove in one of the Twin Sister lakes north of Marmora.

"Barney" was owned by a Lansing, Ont., physician, who was vacationing at his cottage on the lake. Searching for the dog after it had been missing for twenty-four hours, the owner found the body in some four feet of water close to the shoreline.

Examination of the dog's body revealed small marks on its throat which it is believed, were made by an animal which attacked the dog while swimming. Beaver are said to be plentiful in that district but the theory that they would attack a dog from under water is discounted by veteran woodsmen of the area.

There is a possibility, one suggested, that the dog was attacked by a mink.

Garbage from Eating Places Will Be Collected Daily

Following representations being made for the daily service by local restaurants and hotels, daily collection of garbage for public eating places in the city will be inaugurated this week, it was announced today by Glencoe Thompson, chairman of the local board of health.

The daily collection of garbage from hotels and restaurants will commence Thursday morning and will continue until further notice, it was stated. Previously garbage had been collected from public eating places only twice weekly, the same as is customary in the residential districts.

"We feel that daily collection of garbage from restaurants and hotels is essential, particularly during the summer months," stated Chairman Thompson, in announcing the recommendation of the Parks Board. "The daily collection will continue until further notice and in the meantime the additional costs for the increased service will be considered."

Inauguration of the daily collection service for hotels and restaurants has the full support of the new health inspector, George Whitman who, according to the health board chairman, "is doing a splendid job", in his new position.

Belleville Tourist Camp Rated One of Best Equipped in Country; Extra Tables and Benches Needed

The Belleville Tourist Camp on the south side of Dundas Street, between Charles and Albert, is one of the best equipped parks of its kind anywhere. This is the opinion of several tourists who have stopped there this year, reports Mr. Ernest Dainard, caretaker of the park.

One family who started from California to tour the country two months ago, stated that this is the first time that they have come to a trailer camp that has provided laundry facilities. The only criticism of the park as it stands now was offered by Mr. Dainard who says that seven more large benches are needed on the grounds to accommodate the city and district people who have discovered this park to be a fine place to hold a picnic.

There are ten electric plugs available for use by persons desiring electric power for their tents or trailers. Twenty-eight trailers can be accommodated at one time. There are laundry facilities with plenty of hot water, laundry tubs, and clothes lines.

Four Cooking Ranges.

There are four gas cooking ranges available to anyone using the park. Sinks and running water are present in each kitchen.

The ladies rest room has two toilets, a sink and a shower bath. The men's rest room has two shower baths, two toilets, and a sink. Wire refuse containers are handy at any point in the park. All the buildings, laundry, kitchen and rest rooms, are spotlessly clean. The entire establishment is thoroughly cleaned and antiseptically sprayed twice each week. The rest rooms receive daily treatment.

The whole park is wonderfully shaded and there is a refreshing breeze through the grounds at all times. Although there is no store on the grounds there is one two blocks away where all sorts of groceries and meats can be purchased.

Some Suggestions

Mr. Dainard has a few minor grievances to make about the park himself. One is the lack of tables.

"People from the rural areas come here on Saturday to eat their meals," he states, "and there are not enough tables to accommodate them. Many city residents also come here two or three times a week to enjoy a picnic supper and the breeze and they either have to wait for tables or sit on the ground," he stated.

"Another thing," he continued, "the name of this park should be changed to be a City of Belleville Trailer Camp. The Tourist Camp sign is misleading because several persons stop here daily seeking cabins and we have to turn them away."

"There is no advertising of this camp," he commented. "We opened up on the first of June and there were very few trailers in the camp during that month. Word was passed around about the excellent facilities here by persons who did stop and there have been more than one hundred trailers since July 1. The camp closes on September 30."

Low Rates

The most astonishing thing about the whole place is the price asked for the use of the camp. A family can park a trailer in the camp for one night for 50 cents. If they desire electricity the price is 75 cents and an extension cord is provided. If they wish to use the stoves and hot water facilities for cooking the charge is $1.00 People may camp there for $3.50 a week. Everyone stopping there has the use of the laundry and the rest rooms and shower baths, no matter what they pay

"With a little advertising and a few more benches this park would be a sought after haven to the travelling motorist," concluded Mr. Dainard.

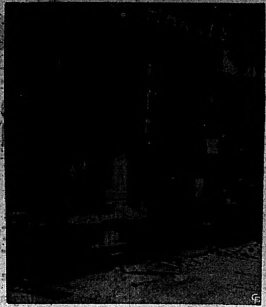
U.K. Ships Stop Buying Foodstuffs In Canadian Ports

Montreal, Aug. 6 — (CP)—British ships arriving from the United Kingdom have all but quit purchasing foodstuffs in Canadian ports because of Britain's need to conserve dollar exchange, it was learned today.



Now, instead of stocking up as they have done for almost eight years, the ships are reaching Montreal fully stocked with food from England. Some ships carry enough supplies for a six-month voyage.

D. R. Townsend, ship's stores administrator for the Price Board said purchase of meat and other foodstuffs has dropped "considerably" in the last month and he believed the downward trend would continue.

AFTER ANTI-JEWISH RIOT IN ENGLAND

This smashed and looted store is part of the aftermath of the anti-Jewish riot that flared in Liverpool, Eng., as a result of the hanging of two British sergeants in Palestine. Twelve persons were held on bail in connection with the demonstration, during which many shop windows were broken. Similar riots were reported from other parts of England.

Yachting Party Learns About One Shoal in Bay the Hard Way

The setting sun threw slanting shadows across the near-glassy surface of the Bay of Quinte off the Government dock. In midstream where summer zephyrs caused a slight ripple, becalmed yachts waited the night breezes.

In the distance an August haze misted the Bay Bridge. Automobiles streamed in an ant-like procession across it, seeking surcease from the stifling heat of the city.

In the inner harbor a handsome sloop-rigged yacht lay at her moorings. On her deck lolled several men, crew and guests of the owner. The beautiful craft, with gleaming brass and snow - like white of her hull, presenting a pretty nautical picture, had paused here on her cruise up the bay.

Moves Out of Harbor

Suddenly there was activity aboard. Crew members went smartly about their duties. The craft was made ready for sailing and within a few minutes her lines had been cast off, and with her auxiliary motor purring like a well-fed cat, she slowly moved out into open water.

Naked to the waist, the guests sat or reclined lazily in chairs or atop the cabin. One of them, a huge man wiped a streaming brow, exuded a gallish gust of wind and looked eagerly seaward where cooler breezes were evident.

The craft slowly turned toward the west. It gradually picked up speed. Heat waves simmered up from the shore and dock buildings. But aboard all was serene. Guests reclined more lazily in their deck chairs. This was the life!

At the wheel, the "skipper" loosened his shirt. He shaded his eyes from the rays of the sun as he turned the bow of the handsome craft towards the bridge.

Hits Shoal.

Then disaster struck. There was a sudden jolt. The schooner tilted bow down, shuddered and stopped. Her stern came out of the water and her tall mainsail swooped suddenly towards the water. There was confusion aboard. The impact of the blow had catapulted the guests from their chairs or their positions atop the cabin. He of the Brobdignagian dimensions rolled down the deck. The scuppers halted his progress and he narrowly missed a ducking.

He reached his feet. Using his hands as a megaphone he roared, "Hey, you, I thought you said you knew every shoal in this blankety- blank bay?"

The "skipper" was unperturbed. He removed his white yachting cap and smiled, pointed to the shoal on which the bow of the boat was stuck fast and replied, "I do. That's one of them right there."

Another cruiser saw the yacht's plight and sped to the scene. Within a few minutes the yacht had been towed off the shoal, little the worse for the experience, and proceeded leisurely on its way up the bay. The grounding took place a few hundred feet west of the Government Dock.

Fatal Injuries Sustained While Drawing in Hay

Suffering fatal injuries when thrown from the hay mow onto the barn floor, Mr. Carl Harry, age 50, 3rd concession Sidney, near Johnstown Church, died in Belleville General Hospital on Tuesday.

The accident occurred as Mr. Harry was engaged in drawing in hay. He had just come in from the field with a load and had gone up into the mow to mow away the hay when as the load was being drawn off the wagon the hook in the end of the barn pulled out.

The rope then caught Mr. Harry and threw him to the roof of the barn from where he dropped to the barn floor. He suffered 11 fractured ribs and other internal injuries.

Born in Sidney Township only a few farms from where he resided, Mr. Harry was the son of the late Mr. Fred Harry and Mrs. Ada Harry, Trent Road, Belleville. He was an only child and had lived in the Johnstown community all his life with the exception of serving overseas in World War I with the cavalry. He was a member of Johnstown United Church.

Surviving are his wife and one son, Norman, attending Queen's University.

The funeral will be held Thursday afternoon from the Cobley Funeral Home, Trenton. Interment will be in Belleville Cemetery.

Burton yesterday he appealed the move to "one of the fifth or sixth senior admirals" and that he was told "even a higher power insisted I be transferred."

51,000 Workers Of Ford Company Face Layoff

Detroit, Aug. 6 —(AP)— Some 51,000 C.I.O. Ford Motor Company employees, whose union officers called off a scheduled strike yesterday, faced a week's layoff today because of a parts shortage.

The Ford Automobile Workers' (C.I.O.) demand for immunity from layoffs under the Taft-Hartley labor law.

Ford and the U.A.W., in an agreement reached only eight hours before a Tuesday noon walkout would have taken place, decided to work out their differences on the Taft-Hartley problem in conferences that could last up to a year.

Details of a reported $20,000,000 pension plan for Ford workers, a second big issue in the day-and-night contract talks that immediately preceded the agreement, will be placed before a Ford - U.A.W. negotiating committee that meets tomorrow.

The Ford shutdown, affecting 35,000 Detroit area employees and 16,000 others in branch plants across the United States, brought to 55,500 the total number of Ford employees left idle by the Murray strike.

Some 4,500 others, employed on Mercury and Lincoln assembly lines, were laid off July 25.

The Ford shutdown, affecting the 7,000 striking Murray workers,

Chrysler Workers Given Wage Boost C. 10 Cents Hour

Windsor, Aug. 6 —(CP)— The United Auto Workers Union (C.I.O.) after a month of negotiations has accepted a new contract with the Chrysler Corporation of Canada assuring uninterrupted production at the company's big Windsor plant on the basis of an increase of seven cents an hour with six paid holidays. Union officials said the agreement represented an increase of 10 cents an hour on an over-all basis.

A total of 3,500 workers were affected by the settlement. Membership of Local 195 of the union at a meeting last night ratified to accept it. The settlement was announced by George Burt, Canadian director of the U.A.W., and William C. MacDonald, chairman of the local.

Union representatives, who said the company had been forced to negotiate a health and hospitalization plan in the future, also said that the terms of the settlement approved here were expected to be offered to 300 Chrysler employees at Chatham, members of Loc. '27, also on strike.

Effective August 3rd.

The increase effective Aug. 3 brings the average wage at the Windsor Chrysler plant to $1.19 an hour, ranging from a low of $1.04 to a high of $1.49. The contract runs for one year and negotiations on renewal may be opened after six months.

The settlement announcement said the union also had asked Chrysler to guarantee that prices of cars would not be raised as a result of the wage increase. The company had not committed itself on this matter but had replied that there was no increase in sight.

The union's original demands were for a wage increase of 15 cents an hour. During the negotiations all offers were kept secret.

It marked the second agreement between the union and the "Big Three" car producers. General Motors with plants in Oshawa and Windsor signed agreements last June for a nine-cent increase. At the Ford Motor Company 9,000 employees are awaiting completion of details of an agreement. If such a plan is accepted the Ford employees have said they would agree to a three-cent wage increase.

Elliott Roosevelt Denies Party Girls Procured for Him

Washington, Aug. 6 (AP)—Elliott Roosevelt, angrily demanding that a senate committee "clear up my moral record", challenged publicity man John W. Meyer yesterday to say that Meyer ever "procured" any party girls for him.

Testifying before the Senate War Investigating Committee, the second son of the late wartime president took the witness chair to answer charges made by Meyer in sworn testimony that Roosevelt had asked him to get girls for him.

Senora Peron Offered Apology

Bern, Switzerland, Aug. 6 — (AP) — Senora Eva Duarte Peron received apologies from the Swiss Federal Council today for stone and tomato throwing incidents which have marked a visit to Switzerland.

Tomatoes were thrown at an automobile in which the wife of the Argentine president was riding with Swiss Foreign Minister Max Petitpierre in Bern Monday. Some tomato struck Petitpierre, splattered other occupants of the car.

Police arrested two men and a woman when they discovered as members of the Swiss labor party for questioning in connection with the incidents.

Yesterday in Lucerne a stone thrown by a bystander shattered the windshield of the car in which Senora Peron was riding. Police arrested a man who they said was mentally unbalanced and who had been an inmate of an Argentine asylum in 1945 and 1946.

Last night Senora Peron was the guest of honor at a reception attended by 400 guests, including members of the diplomatic corps.

tic resources. "We must concentrate as much as possible on those resources, on the reconstruction and development of basic industries and services, on the production of goods for export and on the production of all those things which save us imports."

Non-essentials must be cut out.

The second essential was to increase the total output so that Britain could stand on her own legs as soon as possible.

The third requisite was to press ahead with plans for the expansion of production in the Colonial empire.

Parliamentarie largel was being set in the basic industries and services, with coal first of all.

Proposals had been put before the white workers' leaders for a limited period of an extra half hour's work a day as an emergency measure while the five-day week would still be preserved.

Attlee, in his grim statement outlined drastic restrictive measures to overcome the dollar famine, said Great Britain had proposed negotiations with the United States for revision of two clauses in the loan agreement.

"I am glad to say Mr. Marshall (U. S. Secretary of State) replied agreeing to those discussions," he said.

His reference was to international conferesations on Marshall's proposal of American aid for European economic recovery, a proposal planned by Russia and the eastern European countries in hes sphere.

Attlee said the loan clauses to be discussed were the agreements on sterling convertibility and non-discrimination in trade, both targets in Churchill's address Monday to the opposition Conservative party.

Must Stand by Agreement.

Under the non-discrimination clause, Britain may not cut down her purchases in the United States in order to increase them in non-dollar countries.

"We have been driven to pay dollars or convertible sterling for the purchases we did by which convertibility is really a problem of dollars, rather than one arising more particularly from the loan agreement," Attlee said.

The chancellor said he was about to propose cuts in British imports and subsequently, "the question of discriminating against dollars comes one of much more importance."

Oliver Stanley, Conservative, opened the debate for the opposition government of "encouraging inflation" and "distorting our economy." Stanley said the Labor administration could have prevented the swift exhausting of the United States loan, originally expected to last until 1951.

Attlee announced that the American loan would be exhausted before the end of July, 1948.

In a general review of the course of events since the British premier's present position, he said that by the end of 1946, Britain's exports had reached a level of 111 per cent over the 1938 volume.

Must Stand on Own Feet

Attlee said the American loan was designed to enable Britain to stand on her own feet, but "it would be utterly wrong for Britain to become dependent permanently on another country, however friendly." It was originally hoped that the loan would last until 1950, when Britain might have regained her equilibrium.

An immense amount of internal reconstruction had been accomplished, however. There had been increased production and an unparalleled employment level, Attlee but there had been difficulties and disappointments.

He suggested that "maybe we have tried to do too much in a short time. It may well be that we have relaxed controls too soon."

Some workers, Attlee said, had failed to realize that shorter hours and higher wages had to be matched by greater effort.

"But the record of the people during the past two years is one of which any country can be proud."

Immediate imposition of very heavy sacrifices by foregoing the loan might have resulted in failure to reconstruct. There had been pressure to give the people more of everything. "I do not think it is unwise to hold a balance in these matters."

Attlee declared that the suggestion of former Prime Minister Winston Churchill "that we have frittered away the loan" was not true.

He said that the slow recovery of Europe, heavy overseas commitments and the underspending of those commitments had worked against Britain and had been beyond her control.

The atmosphere was tense, and the galleries packed as Stanley, a former Colonial secretary, opened the two-day debate.

Imports Higher

Prices of British imports has risen by more than 40 per cent since the loan was negotiated, Attlee continued, and by more than 25 per cent since Britain began to draw on it.

"I think it is fair to say that the world dollar shortage would have arisen earlier if it had not been for UNRRA and for loans granted by the United States to other countries."

In the last few months adverse factors had "shown themselves with ever-increasing severity."

The over-all adverse balance—£400,000,000 in 1946—had risen to something more than £700,000,000 in the first half of this year.

Salient feature in recent developments was the increase in dollar deficits.

"During the year 1946 out total dollar deficit was under £350,000,000. This year we have Canadian dollars. For the first six months of 1947, our U.S. dollar deficit was £405,000,000, which represents an annual rate of £810,000,000."

Attlee said: "There is a difference between convertibility and convertibility. We have £250,000,000 ($1,000,000,000) outstanding in the United States. £125,000,000 ($500,000,000) of the Canadian loan and our entire ultimate reserves of £600,000,000 ($2,400,000,000)."

Tracing the causes of the crisis, Attlee observed that Britain found herself in a bad position when damaged both agriculture and industry were destroyed.

"Our people were very tired by the end of the war."

"In Worsened Condition"

Stanley declared that the debate, demanded by the opposition, gave Prime Minister Attlee a chance to let Britain "into the secret" of the economic state of the country.

"What is our actual position?" Stanley asked. "We now seem to be in a worsened position from that we recently occupied when the United States loan drawings

(£2,000,000 = ($3,200,000-$10) a year."

Stanley demanded a "precise statement of the amount of British's dollar losses, "whatever the cause."

"A few weeks ago the indications were that the government's first minister was to wait for help from Canada — to wait for manna from Heaven — which left us with a feeling of despair and humiliation."

Stanley declared that "American help is something for which we can never pay. We must put something on which we can afford to rely."

Britain could not calmly become a pensioner of the United States "committed to live forever on the dole."

He suggested that whatever measures Attlee announced "to Parliament today by remedy Britain's fast dwindling dollar credits must have been equally applicable 12 months ago.

Encouraged Inflation.

The opposition, he said, believed that the "sin" of Hugh Dalton, Chancellor of the Exchequer, was that Dalton actively encouraged inflation during the "cheap money" years, "which has resulted in the distortion of our economy."

Inflationary pressures were becoming intolerable. He asked if Britain could avoid or even control inflation when about 50 per cent of the national income was taken by the exchequer.

Winding up the debate, Stanley had been "outsmarted" in his schemes to get food for the nation, and the people had to pay for it.

Stanley concluded amid cheers: "We shall support whatever measure the Government propose necessary for the salvation of Britain. We are prepared to do nothing to save socialism, but we are prepared to do anything to save Britain."

Chicago, Aug. 6— (AP) —Gerry McKaye, proprietor of an ice cream fountain, so far has found no takers in Chicago of his offer of "on the house" to anyone who can down three of the famous strenuity sundaes he serves.

Weighing two pounds, it consists of five large scoops of ice cream; two whole bananas; two large cookies and fresh fruit topped with whipped cream, marshmallow syrup, two inches of whipped cream, chocolate chopped nuts and two large maraschino cherries.

Savings Bonds

Canadians are again to have an opportunity to invest in Savings Bonds this autumn, it having been decided to float a second bond issue, similar to that which appeared last autumn to provide an opportunity for savings. The bonds will be of the same denominations as last year's and will bear the same rate of interest, two and three-quarters per cent, the term being ten years.

The success of the 1946 issue was excellent, hundreds of millions being put into it without urging, for the people recognized the value of the possession of a quantity of the bonds. The same arrangements as were made last year are expected to be used.

Many hundreds of thousands of Canadians know something of the value of Dominion Government bonds. There is no better security for those who like to put away money when they can do so to have an asset of real value for the future and an asset that continues to grow in value as the years pass.

The bonds also have the value to the nation in that they reduce the tendency to overspend or use up a good share of income when something might well be saved against the passage of years. It is clear that the bonds will have a large scale, probably larger than the previous offering. Persons who bought them last year will no doubt be in the market for this year's issue.

Psychology and Weather

The weather which has been warm and then cool with frequent rains took a change as the temperature rose and the humidity increased on Thursday. For the first time this year people really sweltered. Whereas it was a complaint about the coolness which has been heard, yesterday it was the heat and the moisture.

Port Arthur News Chronicle offers a bit of advice to those who feel the heat. It is to stop talking about it and just relax. It quotes the opinion of a psychologist on the very appropriate subject of clothing. He remarks that the trouble with wearing too much clothing is that a person is hot before he has got on all his clothing and then the heat is kept right next to the body.

This authority advises one to wear something on the head, and to fan oneself but not energetically and rather with a regular rhythm as the people in the tropics do, not exerting themselves. Gulping water by the gallon won't cool one, and besides it is harmful as it forces the heart to do much extra pumping. Heavy food should be avoided and the food that is eaten should be easily digested. Let the perspiration pour out. If one is normal he will perspire as part of the body's process of elimination.

These seem reasonable measures to adopt to keep as cool as one can do on sultry days. It is the part of wisdom to take it as the rest of the weather with a good deal of philosophy.

School for Dogs

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Montreal has a new idea. It is to have a school for dogs in which they are trained in obedience and good manners. The first course lasting two months has been completed and 15 dogs of various breeds have been graduated with full honors. Everyone knows that dogs have a great gift in being able to imbibe training as their association with man for countless ages proves.

Montreal Gazette declares that two months ago they were "a yapping, uncouth and unrestrained group of animals" but on the day of graduation they showed the result of their instructions for "they marched around with their masters, obeying all commands and controlling themselves fully at all times during the evening."

The course of training is not tricks at all. There are eight lessons and the animals are taught such a degree of obedience that will prevent them falling victims to traffic on the roads. That is their "basic training" as it is called.

Ottawa Journal remarks that "we should expect that many dog-owners would welcome an opportunity to secure such a training for their pets, of course at a reasonable fee and it might be something the Humane Society could take up in Ottawa. Few dogs are taught because few owners know how to teach them — they just grow up, and if they survive the perils of puppyhood in a city most of them eventually acquire a certain watchfulness and decorum. Apparently through the right instruction in eight easy lessons they can get this training painlessly and can escape many perils.

There is always something new under the sun but really it does seem strange that so fine an animal as the dog has gone so long without certain training which would have made him of vastly greater appeal and satisfaction to his owner and the family. Dogs are very apt. Horses are very susceptible to training and indicate their ability to learn by the fine performance they can give when called upon. They undergo training as everyone knows. The dog has great gifts likewise but many like Topsy have "just growed up." The school for dogs will attract some attention to a dog's requirements for instruction so that he may be his very best.

In the Summer

The gay table can be the good table, according to nutrition experts. Green and red and yellow and orange are favorite colors with the people who know their food values. "Something crisp - something colored" for summer, they say.

At this time of the year the specialists in dietary suggest that tables should be loaded with glistening leaves of lettuce, ice-cold celery, tall glasses of chilled orange juice, bowls of golden carrots, tender green peas, beans and leafy vegetables, and red tomato juice.

Tonic of Laughter

Laugh to be healthy, say those versed in medical science. There's a warming, stimulating, uplifting quality about cheerfulness, just as there is a sense of coldness and depression in gloom.

There's nothing as infectious as laughter, and it's one type of contagion which the doctors welcome. The happy soul in office, in classroom or in the home, is the fountain-head of a tonic better than anything which comes in bottles.

About Quicksand

Hair-raising fiction will be the chief sufferer from the debunking job performed on quicksand by Prof. Philip C. Rutledge, Northwestern University engineer. He points out that, since the human body is lighter than sand and water, it just isn't possible to sink out of sight, as horror-tale villains often do when overtaken by retribution.

It could hardly be less disconcerting to learn that a ghost is lighter than air and hence couldn't descend without lead shoes. Ghosts wouldn't like lead shoes because they pull estoplasmic legs out of shape.

If it now should turn out that the bite of the rare East Indian asp is a good source of Vitamin A, and that an icicle bullet really won't penetrate flesh, the mystery writers are in a bad way. As it is quicksand will slow up a character, but it won't dispose of him. He'll have to go on for another chapter. — Chicago Daily News.

Every person's blood type should be a matter of record. Every person's type should be noted on any identity card he or she carries, says Saint John Telegraph Journal. Then, if a serious accident should ever befall and a blood transfusion is needed in a hurry, the priceless time required to make a test and find out the types of both donor and recipient, so the blood can be matched, would be saved.

Ontario's Minister of Agriculture would like to have Ontario bacon now exported to Britain branded with the name of this Province. There is another school of thought that thinks we ought to sell "Canada" first before we try to educate the consuming millions to the merits of Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Peace River, Okanagan and the other good parts of this big Dominion says Farmer's Advocate.

JUST FOLKS

"LOOK UP! LIFT UP!"

"Look up! Lift up!" so it ran,
A motto for a noble band
That labored for the good of man
And offered all a helping hand.
Though fine the sentiment expressed—
And would to do it strength I had Always to serve unto my best—
For golfers such advice is bad.

"Look up! Lift up!" counsel wise
At which no thoughtful man would scoff.
'Twould serve for every enterprise,
Except the humbling game of golf.
"Look up!" and golfers miss the ball.
"Lift up!" and players top the shot.
Think you that motto good for all?
The youngest golfer knows it's not.

"Look up!" above the gloomy sky
The sun still shines for one and all!
But, if in golf you raise an eye,
Beyond a doubt you'll miss the ball.
"Lift up!" the brother in despair
And you may cheer his faltering soul;
But on the tee or through the fair
"Lift up!" and you will lose the hole.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Is the Pacific Ocean higher than the Atlantic?

The exact level of the open seas is not the same all over the world. It is affected locally by the configuration of coasts, the gravitational pull of mountains and by currents, tidal and wind influences. The variation, however, generally is not more than a few feet.

It is believed that the level of the Pacific Ocean at the Panama Canal is slightly higher than that of the Atlantic at the other end of the canal. Spirit-leveling across Panama indicates a real difference, although the exact difference has not been determined.

In 1908 the tide gages of the two ends of the canal were connected by a line of precise leveling, and by computing from continuous records of the tide for ten years in both places it was found that the average mean sea level at the Pacific entrance was 0.684 of a foot or about seven inches higher than the average mean sea level at the Atlantic entrance. The levels of the two oceans were about the same in February, but throughout the rest of the year the level of the Pacific was higher than that of the Atlantic, the difference amounting to nearly a foot in October.

This difference may be due in part to ocean currents that tend to pile up the water in the Gulf of Panama while they lower it in the Mosquito Gulf. But there may be a real difference in the mean sea level of the two oceans.

A report of the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey contained a summary of all precise determinations of mean sea level along the American coasts in relation to the lines of land levels that have been carried across the continent. The Pacific Ocean was found to average about two feet higher than the Atlantic at the same latitude.

Difference in sea level should not be confused with difference in tide fluctuations. On the Pacific side of Panama the tide has a fluctuation of more than 20 feet, while on the Atlantic side there is a fluctuation of only about two feet, a difference that may be due to winds, currents and the attraction of neighboring land masses.

There appears to be no foundation for the popular notion that the climate of North and South America was appreciably affected by the digging of the Panama Canal.

Parents Asked Not To Become Excited

London, Ont., Aug. 6 — (CP)— Fear of poliomyelitis is panicking parents and "running doctors off their feet," city medical health officer C. A. Harris said Tuesday. He urged parents not to get excited over minor ailments common to children.

The first district polio case this year was reported last week. He is a London man under 40 and is semi-paralysed. Another suspect case, that of a young girl, is still under observation in Victoria Hospital which is Western Ontario headquarters for polio treatment.

A SAD STORY WITH A HAPPY ENDING

A man arrived at the age when life begins, with a wife, three growing children, a good income from his profession and from an avocation he had cultivated since boyhood. He was physically sound and wise enough to have adequate life insurance, the premiums for which, together with regular payments toward amortization of the home he had prudently bought to give his family stability rather than—well, you know how fond most people are of keeping up with the Joneses —not only provided a precious sort of contentment for the family but added something to the man's character that the most expensive thing on wheels can not give them even if it is all paid for.

Life, then, had just begun when a minor complaint the young man had tolerated for many years became so troublesome that he decided to do something radical about it. The complaint was piles.

In talks to follow we shall explain what piles (hemorrholds) are, what causes them, and what the difference is between internal and external piles, bleeding and so-called "blind" piles, painless and painful piles, etc, but right now let us finish the brief biography of the young man who elected radical treatment.

On the advice of the doctor he consulted, the young man obtained a two weeks' leave of absence, entered the hospital and underwent the operation known as hemorrhoidectomy— excision of piles. When we come to it, in this course, I (Brady) shall endeavor to show just how crude this procedure is.

There is not the least question of the capability or the honesty of the doctor the young man consulted and the surgical skill of the proctologist (rectal specialist) to whom the doctor referred the patient for operation. Yet I contend, although a large number of good physicians and surgeons think otherwise that the clamp and cautery operation for hemorrhoids, like the major operation known as tonsillectomy, is unwarranted except in the occasional case of malignancy (cancer) or similar condition. As we shall see, the painless, office ambulant or injection method of treatment for hemorrhoids gives result at least as good as radical operation, can give and without the loss of time from work or play, the hospitalization and the risk involved in the major operation.

The young man came safely through the operation and in ordinary course would have been out of the hospital and ready to resume work within a week. But that was not to be. By sheer fate, and through nobody's fault, the notorious Streptococcus invaded the field, septicemia (blood poisoning) ensued and that was the end of the life which had only just begun.

I repeat, this was nobody's fault but as fortuitous or accidental as fracturing a vertebra by falling down stairs. The same infection might occur following a mere needle injection, a puncture of skin or mucous membrane or unskilful paring of a corn. However, it seems reasonable to suppose that the risk of such complicating infection would be greater after hemorrhoidectomy than it would after mere puncture of the mucous membrane by the needle in the injection or ambulant treatment (ambulant means the patient keeps up and about at his or her ordinary work or occupation while receiving treatment).

Whenever I think of the family of the young man who had just begun to live I wonder whether he would not have lived on for many years had he elected injection treatment instead of the radical operation. That is a saddening thought, but I can't erase it from my mind. On the other hand, there is the gladdening thought that, thanks to the young man's love for his family, his widow and children continued to receive a comfortable income sufficient to keep them from want. And that, I think, gives what would otherwise be a sad story a happy ending.

Fred Wilson Tells of Trip To West Coast

"I enjoyed my trip to the west immensely but I believe Ontario with its natural resources will be the banner province in the world some day," said Fred Wilson, M.P.P., in speaking to members of the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon at Kiwanis Centre on Tuesday in describing his visit to the western plains and the Pacific Coast. The account of the trip was highly descriptive and those who have made the journey west could visualize the places that were visited while those who have yet to make their first trip in that direction are more than anxious to get started.

The speaker was introduced by Garn Dobbs, who with his wife and Mrs. Wilson made the journey together. In his introduction Mr. Dobbs reviewed the political life of the speaker stating that he started as a school trustee, served ten years in Sidney Township council, six as reeve and was then honored with the wardenship of the best county in the province and later accepted the Progressive Conservative nomination for West Hastings and won the riding by a substantial majority. Fred is well known and highly respected even by his political opponents," said Mr. Dobbs. Kiwanis appreciation was expressed by Sheldon Eaton.

Marvelled at Extent

Mr. Wilson stated that the party went west to see as much of the country as possible in a short space of time and he marvelled at the extent of the prairies and thought Manitoba had the most fertile soil but that the crops were not so good this year because of the dry July. He likes the country best between Regina and Moose Jaw where he saw many beautiful homes but small barns due to the lack of horses, machinery being used mostly for the cultivation of the soil. The speaker was impressed with Calgary and the fine weather in that locality but took his greatest delight in the foothills of the Rockies, where much of the grazing land of Canada is situated.

Mr. Wilson remarked that the first sight of the Rockies made one believe in God, they were so majestic and inspiring. He described the playground at Banff and the wild life that surrounds the National Park. He also told of the spiral tunnel that is used by the C.P.R. railway to reduce the grade, the Fraser River valley, Kicking Horse Pass and other scenic views. Arrival at Vancouver was interesting and the party took a special interest in the ocean shipping from this port. He described the wonderful harbor and country's growth of ease that can be seen in this coastal city. The party returned home by way of Jasper Lodge, Edmonton, Saskatoon and Winnipeg.

Rodeo Show Profitable

Harry Trepanier told the club that the Rodeo show staged by the Club netted a nice profit and he thanked the newspaper, the radio and all those who had contributed their time to make it a success. He also spoke of the forthcoming carnival and hoped that the members would pitch in to make it a success. The Club members endorsed a by-law of the club respecting the election of the president that was president each year. No one will be allowed to run for president or vice president who has not had a year's experience as a director and after the directors are named there will be a ballot taken of those wishing to run for the offices and the high director will be president and the second high the vice president. Jack White presided at the luncheon with Ken McIntosh collecting the fines and Phil Huddleston at the piano for the community singing.

Coffee Prices Likely to Rise 15 cts. a Pound

Toronto, Aug. 6 — (CP) — An increase in the retail price of coffee is anticipated by wholesale firms here, it was learned last night. Coffee officials said the date on which prices would advance depended entirely on the present stocks owned individually by wholesale firms.

None ventured a prediction on how much extra a pound the boost would be. The matter is followed closely on an announcement that the price of most popular brands of tea jumped 15 cents a pound during the weekend.

Coffee wholesalers said that during the war the commodity was subsidized by the government and now dealers were buying in the open world market. They emphasized that soon they wouldn't be able to make a profit unless prices were raised.

Polio Cases Total Mounting Across The Dominion

(By The Canadian Press)

The total of poliomyelitis cases reported throughout Canada since the beginning of the year now stands at 201 with seven deaths, a Canadian Press survey showed today. Totals in some provinces rose sharply over the weekend but medical authorities said there was no danger of a general epidemic.

British Columbia reports one fatality and an all-time high for the province of 101 cases, 77 of which are in the greater Vancouver area.

Saskatchewan has recorded two deaths and a total of 35 cases. Two deaths also occurred in Alberta, one a 22-year-old man, the other a young woman. Alberta has only 30 cases.

Ten polio cases developed in Manitoba over the weekend, bringing that province's total to 72 to date. Winnipeg now has 31 cases. Brandon seven and Portage La Prairie five, with the others scattered through the province.

Although Ontario has had 31 cases and one fatality, a Health Department official said yesterday there were no signs of an epidemic anywhere in the province. Sixty per cent of cases reported had been mild, abortive, or without paralysis, he added. Last year at this time there were 64 cases, and five deaths had been recorded.

In Toronto, eight patients from the city and 23 from outlying points are receiving treatment here. Nine of the Ontario cases developed over the holiday weekend.

Six new cases were reported from Montreal, bringing the city's total to eight, compared with 111 at this time last year.

The Maritimes have had 14 cases, seven in New Brunswick and seven in Nova Scotia, with one death in the latter province. Prince Edward Island, which counted 25 cases in 1946, has been polio-free so far.

Wife Leaves Him After Losing $900

Toronto, Aug. 6 — (CP) — Louis Bodis of Port Erie, who lost $900 in confidence men here last week, said last night that he had returned to his home to find that his wife had left. "It was just a case of the cowboy going to the big city. I don't blame her a bit for leaving me," he said.

Bodis did not knew where his wife had gone.

In police court here yesterday John Meagher, 21, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., was remanded to Aug. 11 on a charge of theft. Police claimed that $400 had been recovered from Meagher, the numbers on the bills corresponding to the currency which was part of the amount Bodis lost here when he engaged in a bet with two strangers as to who had the most money on their persons.

Police tried to cheer the sorrowing Bodis with the suggestion: "When it's all over you can have a second honeymoon."

Sullivan Throws Another Bombshell Aimed at C.S.U.

Montreal, Aug. 6 (CP)—J. A. (Pat) Sullivan threw another bombshell aimed at the Canadian Seamen's Union last night, when he told the rival Canadian Lake Seamen's Union announced he had received information of an alleged plot by the C.S.U. under orders of the Communist party to tie up Great Lakes shipping by going on strike at a time when grain shipments would be moving overseas.

Sullivan, 53-year-old labor leader who resigned the presidency of the C.S.U. last March charging it was Communist dominated, said he had "irrefutable evidence" from "a friend in the waterfront section of the Communist party in New York" that the C.S.U. had decided to call a strike in Ontario, perhaps next year.

He said the information came in a letter from his New York friend and told of a July 19 meeting in Toronto between officials of the C.S.U. and the Communist party at which it was decided to call a walkout that would tie up grain shipments to European ports in order to strengthen Canadian Communist ranks and the international market of Russia in Europe.

Would Not Give Name

Sullivan, who met newspapermen at a north-end Park Avenue apartment, had cut off the letter writer's name, explaining he would not make it public "because there is no knowing what might happen to him if his name came out."

With the letter was the text of a speech which Sullivan said was to have been made tonight over the network of Canadian radio stations by C.S.U. President Harry Davis. In this speech, Davis was to warn Canadians that, unless the Canadian government appointed a controller over certain shipping interests, a strike would be inevitable.

A few hours after Sullivan's press conference, C.S.U. Publicity Director Percy Newman announced a scheduled radio address by Davis tonight had been cancelled at the request of Leonard Brockington, recently appointed by the Labor Department to mediate the dispute between the C.S.U. and the Canada Steamship Lines and the Sarnia and Colonial Steamship Lines.

Newman quoted Davis as saying the broadcast had been called off "in the interest of industrial peace" in the hope that the dispute would be settled. Regarding Sullivan's statement, Davis said he had "no comment" to make.

WORLD'S FIRST JET-FLYING BOAT FIGHTER

The world's first jet flying-boat fighter made its public appearance over the Solent, Eng., after several hush-hush flights by Chief Test Pilot Geoffrey Tyson. The plane, which was built by Saunders-Roe at their Isle of Wight works, has twin jets, giving a speed of more than 400 m.p.h.; the pilot sits in a pressurized cabin, and it is armed with four cannon. By means of an ejector-type seat the pilot may, in case of emergency, be ejected clear of the aircraft. He then releases himself from the seat and makes a normal descent. The flying boat is able to automatically moor itself when it alights on water. This photo shows the jet flying-boat fighter in flight, passing a motor sailing yacht in the background.

Mounties Launch Drive on Way Merchants Handle U.S. Currency

Ottawa, Aug. 6 — (CP)—The Mounties are going to work on the case of the missing American dollars.

Key agency in Canada's drive for those dollars, the Foreign Exchange Control Board announced today the R.C.M.P. are launching "a country-wide check of the way storekeepers, service stations, hotels and others are handling U. S. currency received from tourists."

"Reports indicate that many merchants are not turning in their U. S. dollar receipts but are paying them out freely in change and in some cases are selling them to the public in exchange for Canadian currency," the board said.

In recalling that tourists "are one of the main sources of foreign exchange needed to pay for Canadian imports and other normal expenditures in the United States. So that their U. S. dollars will be available for these purposes, regulations require that Canadian merchants and others turn the U. S. currency they receive into their banks.

"The check-up now is being made and "where breaches of the regulations are found prosecutions under the Foreign Exchange Control Act will be commenced."

Under the regulations a merchant, hotelkeeper or other person engaged in a business serving tourists may accept U. S. currency at par and may make change in U. S. currency for a non-resident tourist who tenders U. S. currency in payment for purchases. For this purpose a merchant may keep on hand a reasonable amount of U. S. currency but with this one exception, is required to turn into his bank all he receives.

In no circumstances is a merchant, hotelkeeper, etc., entitled under the regulations to pay out U. S. currency in exchange for Canadian currency or in change to a Canadian resident, even though the latter may have tendered U. S. currency in payment for a purchase, the Board said.

LATTA BATTERS SWING LUSTILY IN 9-1 VICTORY

Defeat Cellar - Dwelling Swacos With Five-Run Outburst in Fourth; Vern Goyer Hits Two Triples and Single; Marsh Allows Only 4 Hits

The four-hit hurling of Chunky Joe Marsh, backed up by 14 fourth-innings five-run explosion on the part of his mates war clubs sent the Latta baseball team away to a 9-1 victory over the cellar-dwelling Swaco squad at the Alemite Field last night.

Marsh allowed the planters but four hits, these being bunched in pairs in the second and third innings when the Swacos scored their lone run. Marsh struck out eight and walked two.

"Chuck" Barriage on the mound for Swacos duelled with Marsh for three innings allowing but one hit for one run, and then the clouds opened and the rains came. "Chuck" whipped three and walked none.

In the fourth, Vern Goyer teed off with his first of two triples and raced across the plate on Whitman's single. Red" Carson promptly poled a home run to deep left field and Timmy Williams followed with a single. Chapman maintained the hit tempo with a sharp drive to left field and then Barriage settled down to retire Rogers and Marsh. McCreary blasted a hit to centre field but Brown struck out to end the five run splurge.

Latta scored another in the fifth and added two more for good measure in the sixth.

Swacos scored their only run when Bradden who had singled and gone to second on an error galloped home when Gray drove a single through second base.

Vern Goyer paced the Latta attack with two triples and a single, with Chapman pulling a brace of clouts and Red Carson a homerun. Gray, Soules and Elliott were the only Swaco hitters to connect safely with Marsh's plants.

Sports Roundup

By CHICK HOSCH
(For Hugh Fullerton, Jr.)

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 6 (AP) — Paul (Bear) Bryant, Kentucky's young football coach, at first glance appears to have scored the south's greatest victory since Bull Run.

A tentative roster of 48 freshman gridders lists 27 "Yankees," including nine from Pennsylvania and 10 from West Virginia. In fact, he got an entire "all-state" backfield from the latter state and a dozen others made various "honors" teams.

To go with those 48 yearlings, Bryant has 29 lettermen and about 20 reserves from last year, which ought to rank his team fairly close to the top this fall.

Hippety Hop

Cliff Hopp of Hastings, Neb., brother of baseball's Johnny and football's Harry (Hippety), has entered Georgia. He's a freshman halfback—the Bulldogs will sport a brother act of three fields from Hamilton, Ont., as Les Barrie, Floyd and Ernie.. but the brightest Ohio star in Monty Burns' backyard at the moment appears to be Bobby Watson, a prep halfback star last year at Columbus. Some Ohio Wesleyan might make 'em forget about Charlie Trippi in a couple of years.

Pan Masters

A passing combination to make southerners forget Alabama's Dixie Howel-to-Don Hutson combine of a dozen years ago is shaping up at the University of Mississippi with Charlie Conerly doling the throwing and Barney Poole, ex-Army star, end, the catching. Conerly had 65 completions in 134 attempts last year.

Another prospect getting rave notices in the Rebel's camp is Nick Digravinos, a 167 sprinter who made the Mississippi Junior Colleges all-star team last year as a high school senior. He's 22, an army veteran.

TOUTHFUL AUTHOR

Diefsell, best known as a statesman, has written a successful novel when he was 21.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Bridger

Let it be said right away, you have been sufficiently warned. Trying to guess the bid to select a good partner. Your guesses are right now and then. But not often enough.

On the other hand, you are now warning if you follow the bids in order of choice in T-A-N. Look first for a takeout to your suit. If none, look second for an assist of partner's suit. Only as a last resort, bid no-trumps.

You must realize from this rule that a takeout may kin have an assist or no-trump bid. So, it has become a rule that a takeout to a new suit is forcing for one round.

Takes a simple pair of hands that came up in demonstration after one of my lectures. Here they are

♠10 7 5
♣A Q 7 5 3
♥A Q 9 2
♦A Q 8 6 4
♣K 2

The bidding went like this:

South	North
Pass	1 H
2 C	2 D
2 NT	3 NT

The takeout to two clubs by south is forcing for one round. The takeout to two diamonds by north is forcing for one round. On this account, both does not pass.

South has three tricks. He has already consumed them by his raise to two clubs over one heart. Therefore, even though he has a rebiddable club suit, he does not show it. He lacks another trick with which to raise to three clubs. However, he has been forced to bid. He has not enough tricks for another takeout. He has not adequate support for an assist in a suit bid by partner. So, he has nothing left except no-trump. When you must, you bathe.

The Movie Column

Hollywood, Aug. 6. (AP)—The feud of stars making their own pictures continues. Brian Donlevy has refused to join the list of actor-producers, this year. Next year he's going up a deal for one film a year under his own banner.

Dewlevy joins Dana Andrews, Robert Cummings, Mel vyn Douglas and others who have set up their own companies in recent months. Actors agree that is the best plan for them, since it provides an income over a period of years. A straight salary is too soon swallowed by taxes, they say. Also, with no tax relief in sight this year, more actors will be popping up as producers.

Rich Boss

"Wild Winter Corner" will be whipped into final shape on the night seas. Director Victor Saville sails on the Queen Mary Aug. 8 and will finish cutting the film aboard ship. Herbert Stothart will accompany him and compose the score en route. Hope it's not a rough crossing. They'll need a preview the picture in England, which is something new.

Larry Parks' suit against Columbia is being watched carefully by other employees. Evelyn Keyes also signed a new contract before she got the "Helen Morgan" role. And when Glenn Ford returned from the Marines, he signed a new pact before he could play with Bette Davis in "A Stolen Life". The studio wanted seven years, but Glenn would give only five, Susan Peters is doing a fine job in "The Sign of the Ram" and already there is talk of Academy awards.

Robert Cummings hies to Victoria, Canada, for a visit with friends after he finishes "Sleep My Love". When he returns he'll start his first production on his own.

Risen Up-to-Date

Vincent Price has bought a screen treatment of Rosen's "The Wild Duck", and he wants to sell it to Columbia or U-I. It has a fascinating role for him, natch.

The bill for "Arch of Triumph" has passed the five million mark. That's a lot of Calvados.

Frank Sinatra bought a two-engined plane and will fly his family around the west for a vacation between the Kissing Bandit" and "Miracle of the Bells". Happy listening, Cumana" by Freddy Martin. . . Eddy Howard is at the Coconut Grove and Duke Ellington at Cindy's with very listenable music. But not danceable music. . . Kitty Kallen wants to play Ben in "Look Homeward Angeles". Ity, the favorite book of Hollywood people. . . Tom D'Andrea mixes the ideas for Eddie Cantor at Warners, as reported. "I'd rather make it to the top of my own," says he.

BOY OF 15 ARRESTED

Toronto, Aug. 6.—(CP)—Police today believed they had ended a "reign of terror" at Simcoe Beach off the central Toronto waterfront with arrest of a 15-year-old boy. He was accused as the bicycle-riding youth who had struck down two girls with a sawed-off baseball bat and hit a woman with a tree limb. The attacks had occurred in the past few nights, leading to anxiety among parents of youngsters frequenting the beach.

Johnny Mize's 34th and 35th Homers Against Phillies Put Him Ahead of Babe Ruth's Pace

Giant's First Baseman Has 58 Games to Hit 26 Homers for a Tie

By JOE REICHLER
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

It is still anybody's race in the National League and as long as big Johnny Mize keeps clouting those long ones, the homer-ship thing New York Giants are not to be sold short.

Mize not only is keeping the Giants right in the pennant fight, but is seriously threatening what is probably the greatest batting feat in baseball—Babe Ruth's record of 60 home runs in the 1927 season.

The hard-hitting first baseman walloped two into the Polo grounds stands last night to lead the Giants to a 5-3 victory over Philadelphia Phillies. The victory coupled with the Braves' 4-3 win over Brooklyn in Boston reduced the league - leading Dodgers' margin over the third-place Giants to seven games.

The runner-up St. Louis Cards now trail the Dodgers by six games following their 8-3 triumph over the Cubs in a daylight game in Chicago. The Braves are 10 games off the pace.

Mize's pair of round trippers his 33rd and 34th of the season came in the Giants' 26th and-performance by two games ahead of Ruth's record "getting pace. The Babe did not hit his 34th until the New York Yankees had entered their 88th game. Big John has 58 games in which to hit the 26 homers he needs for a tie.

Ruth, himself, was all Mize utterly is impressed his record, with a great deal of interest. Asked what other day whether he thought anybody ever would better his mark, the former Bustin of Sport remarked:

"Mize is the only fellow around who might do it. If anyone does, I hope it is he. This way, the record would still be in baseball. Johnny, you know, is my wife's cousin."

Taking advantage of 10 bases on balls to add to their 11 hits off Cincinnati Hurlers, Pittsburgh Pirates disposed of Lloyd Rate in Pittsburgh 12-4. Hank Greenberg drove in three runs to raise his season's output to 68 for the Bucs this season.

The Yankees stretched their Amsgican League lead to 14 games over the runner-up Boston Red Sox by defeating the Athletics in Philadelphia 8-3 in a night game at Shibe Park while losing a 2 to 1 decision to the Senators in Washington.

Bob Lemon hung up his second straight victory since his promotion to a starting role as Cleveland Indians downed the Tigers in a twilight game at Detroit 5-1. Manager Lou Boudreau of the Indians clouted out two doubles on four times at bat to wrest the league's batting leadership from Detroit George Kell .336 to .332.

Ed Lopat handcuffed the Browns in St. Louis with seven hits in pitching Chicago White Sox to a 5-0 night game victory. The portly lefthander drove in two runs with a double and single and scored himself.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE H. CARVER, Sports Editor

Fletcha of the city and district especially Cobourg and Trenton are earning an enviable record with the beat at Lehigh's Canadian Legion bowling shoot-out at the Memorial Arena with the first boat tabled for 8.30.

Fans hereabouts still remember the six-winning Golden Gloves championship when Dafoe swinging strapper from the north a few miles west of here was given a decision over the sturdy young scrapper from Cobourg. The judges decided Dafoe had won the bout on points and two of them gave the nod to the Trenton lad. The fans thought otherwise and let their NOhs know in no uncertain terms.

So incensed were they that they refused to let officiating presentation makers do their verbal stuff and the correctness were of the silent motion picture type. And they didn't let it go at that. They protested long after the fight and the result is that Dafoe and Charles have been rematched in the main go at tonight's flatic fiesta.

Charles, a smart boxer, who does his fighting warily and watches for openings has been training faithfully and he is going all out to show the judges of the Golden Gloves scrap the error of their ways. Dafoe, a swinging type, who brings 'em up from his ankles regardless, is just as anxious to show the fans that he is deserving of the Hiram Walker Trophy and the result should be one of the fanciest beak-bashing affairs seen here in many a moon.

Other top-flight boxers from the district will show their wares at tonight's card. Included are Joey Wilson, and Soup Mondeville, starry young Belleville boys; Jerry Downes, an old favorite; Ray Lucas, clever young Golden Gloves champion; and Lyle LaBrash also of this city; Kid Morris, Toronto; Young Corbett, formerly of Montreal and now of the Queen City, and a number of other Golden Gloves champions and contenders.

The card has all the earmarks of being a thrill-packed affair with a punch a minute and plenty of spills. Managers Eddie Lee and Mark Storms have been carefully grooming their lads for the battle and the Belleville crew should walk away with some of the honors.

But as we said before, the feature attraction is the Charles - Dafoe battle which that should produce some flatic fireworks. There is plenty of ring stuff between the boys and don't ign-that preliminary handshake fool you. Behind it is the determination to win and all coats and flats for and leaders will fly when the two clash.

Another diamond classic is scheduled for the Exhibition Grounds tonight when the Batawa Shoemen and the Trenton Flyers clash in a postponed Belleville Baseball Association tilt. Flyers are nursing a precarious hold on second place in the league standing with the Shoemen a scant few points behind. Nepanee is third with the top of the heap with two games in hand, and tonight's game will have a distinct bearing on the standings. Trenton nudged Bata 2-1 in their last meeting and the Shoemen, will be all out to reverse that decision. Game starts at 8:30 under lights.

Belleville golfers did right nobly at the District Tournament held at the Catarqui Golf and Country Club, Kingston, over the weekend. Tommy Carruthers won the second low gross in the first flight while Don Black won second low gross in the second flight.

Stocky Joe Marsh, Latta righthander is still the lowly Swacos baseball team to one run and four hits in a postponed game at the Alemite Field last night and aided by his mates five-run rally in the fourth went on to win a 9-1 victory. Jack Carson's crew garnered nine clouts off Chuck Barriage, two of them triples off the war club of Jumbo Joyce. The game was even-stephen for three innings when the Latta bats suddenly found the range and pounded out six safeties to tuck the fastime away.

One of the reddest faces we have seen in a long season was that worn by Bidgood, Peterborough Marines fireman during the Flyers-Peter exhibition joust the other Goodfellows' day. Bidgood, mebbe, has a new first-baseman's glove, one of those mitts with a meat pocket between thumb and forefinger. Whether he is used to it or not we don't know, but what happened was this. A Pete Infielder fielded a hot ground ball but it was too hot. Bidgood was high. The first sacker reached for the ball and apparently thought it had fielded his glove and wept on to the bat rack. He looked at it and looked for the pill. Not being able to locate it, he turned back to the field infield. There came a soft thud and the ball dropped to the ground. It had been tucked away in the corner pocket of the mitt. Immediately the Flyer runner had crossed the bag.

According to the Ontario Baseball Association release of yesterday regarding minor league playdowns it is stated that the appointment of each club in the playdowns must be from the name of the league or club they are drawn with, contact the OBA convener and clears re dates for home games, umpires, etc. When clubs do not agree on umpires the OBA will appoint them.

Kiwanis Juniors are drawn with the Kingston Junior 'A' squad in a two-of-three series. Arrangements for dates will be made with Conveners Ernie Summers and Robert Nesbitt, Kingston, with Executive Ken J. Colling standing by in an advisory capacity. It is likely that the Kiwanis teams home game will be played on a Wednesday with the second game a Saturday affair in Kingston. That has been the arrangement in other years and no change will likely be made.

The draws for the upper racket groups may not be released until after the OBA executive meeting scheduled for August 15th. There is some confusion around here regarding groupings. The Trenton Flyers were given a senior "B" rating recently but apparently that has been changed, or is in the process.

There is a strong possibility that the Kiwanis-Kingston playdown game scheduled for Belleville may be played under the Exhibition Grounds floodlights. Certain team executives have to be made however before this can be done, the runner pegists that the Kiwanis management prefers the lights to the twilight.

According to Legion sports officials here, the softball squad which absorbed a healthy shellacking at the hands of the Peterborough Legion team the other day, are still rankling under the sting of the setback. They claim the Pete Veterans drew the cream of the softball crop in the Electric City. Legion members that is, and threw them together in a heap to maintain the Peterborough slogan that the only good Belleville team is a beaten one.

But now the lads state, what is sauce for the goose is a shendygaff for the gander. When the two squads meet here next Saturday at 3.30 the Belleville Legion will line-up the pick of the city Legion softball players in an effort to lower the colors of the doughty Petes. The game will be played at the Exhibition Park and lovers of softball should not miss this joust between two starry veteran squads.

Winnipeg, Aug. 5 (CP)—Hockey fans across Canada have been speculating on which team will represent the Dominion at the Olympic games in London next year—and since Avery Brundage's blowoff about figure skater Barbara Ann Scott's car some have wondered if there is a top-flight team which meets his strict definition of an "amateur".

Harvey (Winnipeg Free Press) Dryden wonders why hockey officials in Manitoba have not pressed the case of their Flyers for the Olympic trip. He says that the Montreal Royals and Calgary Stampeders out of the running—they have said their boys were paid and roughly how much—Flyers are the top team of the "amateur" clubs left.

"Avery" Brundage himself could hardly complain if he saw the 'honorariums' they received at the close of the season . . They scarcely paid the boys carfare."

Dryden believes that if they cared to ferret the point a little Flyers might even qualify under the minutely subdivided definition of an "amateur" that Avery and-his pals hatched out.

Pigskin Patter

Tony (Winnipeg Tribune) Allan says Toronto Argonauts' jaunt to Winnipeg for a pair of games with Winnipeg Blue Bombers at the end of the month may result in a better understanding of eastern football methods and style of play in the west.

Western fans have always been of the opinion that football as played in the east has nothing in its favour. Allan says this based only on the Boyds and Clergy Cup finals has always been played in the east and western fans have not had the opportunity of seeing the eastern-style game.

He says the eastern teams which have come west for exhibition games during previous years have done little to change western opinion—Blue Boys have been harmful. The old two-bucks-and-a-kick-style is a dead issue in the west and after seeing Hamilton Tigers of a few years ago he does not think they implanted here that was eastern football. Montreal Alouettes were regarded as an exception to the rule last fall.

Allan says he hopes the Argo team which meets bombers here is the "original New York club which took the Grey Cup" this last fall. "Without guys like Krol and Copeland they'd be nothing more than an inferior road show."

Casting and Trolling

Stan (Winnipeg Free Press) Bentham tells of a recent interview with Douglas Gleason, sales manager of a bait company in Minneapolis. Bentham says Gleason told him Canadian anglers do not work for their fish—they are content to sit in a boat trolling and wait for the fish to come to them. American fishermen on the other hand have to work. They cast for their quarry.

Bentham says the official believes this is the reason why American visitors get good results from waters which Canadians regard as poor fishing ground.

TORONTO LEAFS DEFEATED IN TENTH INNING

Two Singles and Infield Out Enables Baltimore Orioles to Win 8-7

(By The Associated Press)

Montreal, Aug. 6. —Ability to knock off Syracuse Chiefs with almost monotonous regularity is one of the primary reasons the Royals lead the International League by four games today and the Chiefs remain in third place, seven games off the pace.

Manager Clay Hopper's Royals took the Chiefs in camp for the 15th time in 21 meetings last night with a 6-2 triumph.

Hank Sauer blasted his 44th homer in the ninth to account for one of Syracuse's runs.

The win enabled the Royals to pick up a half game on the second place Jersey City Giants who divided a twin bill with Buffalo Bisons. The Bisons won the seven-inning opener, 1-0 and the Giants took the windup 6-3.

Newark's up and coming Bears stretched their winning streak to four games and moved to within 9-1-2 games of fourth place Buffalo with a 7-3 conquest of Rochester Red Wings.

Baltimore pulled to within a virtual seventh-place tie with the Toronto Maple Leafs as a result of their 8-7 10-inning triumph over the Leafs. Two singles and an infield out broke the Orioles their payoff counter.

Toronto Maple Leafs broke a scoreless deadlock by belting his 40th homer of the year with the bases loaded in the Orioles' half of the fourth. Moss in the ninth player in the circuit's history to reach the 40 mark in round-trippers.

The Leafs snapped a 5-5 tie when Goody Rosen singled with the sacks jammed in the eighth but Al Cihocki sent the game into overtime with a two-run single in the top of the ninth.

Pitcher Barred From Taking Part In Loop Games

(By The Canadian Press)

An "amateur" incident bobbed up during the weekend at Fort Erie, Ont., when Buffalo softball officials announced the barring of ace pitcher Peanuts Zachahowize from participation in international softball league games on penalty of losing his amateur status. The league comprises two Buffalo teams, a Port Colborne entry and three Buffalo teams playing night games at Fort Erie and Buffalo. The fuss arose over league use of two professional hockey players.

The Oshawa Parkwood stable's three-year-old filly Lochiel Lass under jockey J. Drewery made no mistakes yesterday as she won the $1,400-added Barton plate, star-turning feature of the third day of the Hamilton Jockey Club meeting.

Here's handsome Mike Sharpe, the Golden Boy of Wrestling who tangles with Straigter Bob Wagner in the semi-final to the main bout at the Memorial Arena on Friday night. In the preliminary two dashing Irishers will joust. Pat Flanagan, popular idol of the faithful here and Dangerous Dan O'Connor, a brok'n of a boy who is not fussy how he wins the nod.

Ken. Kenneth, New Zealand wrestling champion, was far from satisfied with the work of Referee Ernie Powers last week when he met defeat at the hands of the Palermo Panther, John Kaz, shown above. The boy from "down under" states that he was given the well-known works by the official and at once demanded a rematch. That is what has happened and there'll be fireworks at the Memorial Arena Friday night when the two clash. "Yeah!" growled the Panther, "I can lick him on Monday, Friday nights or always. Put in four referees and I'll take all of 'em on." Nice fella, what?

Jammed Ailerons Postpone World Flight Attempt

Chicago, Aug. 6 (AP)—William (Bill) Odam, who took off on a projected around-the-world solo speed flight Sunday, was back on his home airport today after having flown approximately one-sixth of the intended mileage.

Shortly after passing over Halifax, N.S., in his 4,000-horse power, twin-engined plane, the former British ferry command pilot said his ailerons jammed and he was forced to turn back.

He landed on his Chicago airport at 11:35 p.m. CDT, nine hours and 24 minutes after the take-off. He said he probably would leave again today in another attempt to halve the round-the-world solo record of 186 hours set by the late Wiley Post in the first single-handed "Winnie Mae" monoplane in 1933.

The 27-year-old pilot said he had covered about one-sixth of the projected flight or more than 3,000 miles of his 19,600-mile route in the round trip to Nova Scotia and back.

On his next attempt, he said, he would carry a lighter fuel load and make his first stop at Gander, Nfld., instead of Paris.

CHAPTER 18.

But first, with matter-of-fact simplicity and directness, he must make some things clear upstairs. Anna was taken into consultation; to which room would it be wisest to move little Dean's bed? Anna, with all a pleasant's instinct comprehension, thought it ought to be in the room next to her own, and the back hall. Mrs. Blount, as unquestioning as Anna, suggested the big middle room, between her own and Christy's.

The big middle room was accordingly aired and sleepy little fragrant Dean moved into the big double bed therein. Her grandmother stepped the connecting doors so that she would hear the slightest stir from the child, and servant, mother, husband and wife separated for the night.

But Monty was not yet satisfied; he went downstairs for coat, and built a solidly glowing bank of fire in the steel-rodded grate in his and Christy's room; the light and warmth of it turned the stately old apartment into a place of comfort, and Monty, clasping Christy, in a wrapper of gray wool, with her dark collar and cuffs, and pipings of vermillion here and there, came out to sit admiringly by the fire.

"Mean to say you and the kid didn't have fires up here this winter?" Monty asked, surprised that the novelty of it should please her.

"Well, we have a furnace, Monty, and after all, we weren't much in this room."

"That furnace. Pouring up soot and gas through gratings in the floor. I wonder your mother hasn't been asphyxiated, all these years!"

"I'll be darned if I don't like this old rookery, Monty, dear."

"It was the solution for Dean and me. She was getting one cold after another, even in all the modernness of our own place," Christy said, her mind not on her words. "But floor furnace or not floor furnace, she's been splendidly well here."

"Did you get away at all, visits or trips?"

"No. But it's been all right. Cold nights in summer and lovely warm winter days. You know Gurney Hill?"

"Mom could put up apartments on this site and turn it into income property."

"She never will. She'd die in a modern six-room flat with all modern conveniences. Anna'd die without a good old washboard and chopping bowl, tin bathtub and twenty-by-eight kitchen."

"I suppose so. But they're putting two big plants into Gurney Hill, and people will be looking for small houses."

"Then we'll never have any trouble renting ours."

"Trouble! I wish we had ten of 'em The Fortescues talked you 'em The Fortescues talked you through all this, didn't they, Christy?"

Her color changed. She spoke with a fluttering heart.

"They've been awfully good to me They have all sorts of interesting friends."

"You wrote me I kind of liked him."

"Norman? Yes, he's—he's reliable."

"They're all leaving now?"

"Now they can get back to Paris, yes."

"Well, it doesn't matter so much if they will be leaving, too How much did you like this Lin Devereaux?"

His tone was quiet, unsuspicious; it had a merely friendly and curious interest.

"What makes you think I liked him at all?"

"I read between the lines I read your letters until they were as limp as this cloth. You'll see 'em."

"I liked him in a funny way," said Christy slowly.

"How "funny"?

"As a matter of fascination. I never admired him. I never really liked him. And now I hope I don't feel anything for him. Christy said, finding her words carefully. "Not even anger. Not even contempt."

"But he got under your skin."

"As the French song has it—"

"You mean, 'Je l'ai tellment dans la peau,'" she quoted, frowning, flicking into the fire a bit of kindling. And Monty, they're not married.

"You didn't suspect that!"

"Oh. Never! Did you?"

"Never," Monty said. "And how did that complicate?"

"It complicates!"

"Your affair with the other man?"

"Lin said, on the way up, that he hated the way love affairs ended, that the deeper—the deeper, well, I suppose he meant the passion, though he didn't use that word; was, the bitterer it was when it was over. It was a brush-off."

"He won't for it."

"No. And by that time I was so scared, so miserable for fear I'd be caught alone with him in the cabin overnight, that I'd say anything, practically incapable of any feeling at all for anything. Then he said Christy darkening, "I'm going to Chicago where the Miller's were, Mont."

"to go home, and get Dean into my arms, and forget that there was anyone else in the world but us three!"

"Well, then—go ahead and forget it," Monty said.

For a moment Christy went there's more." Christy wept on, her face darkening.

Monty saw the set expression; his own grew grave.

"It was Chris Cahill, where the

"Yes. They had a cabin behind the main cabin, and she came staggering in—all blood—Christy's own blood left her cheeks and she turned a haggard face toward Monty. In the dim light—

"Great Lord!" he said, under his breath. "You—but there's no telephone there!"

"Oh, no. And it was snowing hard. All night, Monty...all night! We got her on the couch, sponged her off a little, and I drew the wound on her head together and bandaged it with towels. We gave her milk and brandy, and she dozed off. But I knew she was done for."

"What'd you do with him? Lock him up? He went berserk, did he?"

"No, he was mild as a lamb. He'd spent it all, on her. He was scared. He crouched down at the foot of the couch, and he went to sleep, too, sat in a big chair with blankets around him; we didn't sleep much."

"I should think not. So you're into it, up to the neck," Monty said, thinking.

"If he confesses—" Christy began hopefully.

"He won't confess. He says now he had the cabin on here while you were settling off the baby. He says now an Indian came in and left."

"An Indian! In that storm! He must be crazy. Why, he told Lin and me they had quarrelled, and that she struck—him."

Christy stopped, as the realization that her testimony was all-important came over her. "They won't believe him," she said, her mouth dry.

"No, they'll get a confession out of him. They'll work on him a moment, and Christy, for sheer misery, did not speak.

Then Monty left his chair, and bringing a small upholstered stool to sit on, came to sit at Christy's with him, came to sit at Christy's knee. She gripped his hands in a very passion of repent and he held them against his heart. His manner was that of a doctor, quiet, attentive, reassuring.

"Well, then," his voice like cooling waters running over her fevered spirit, "we'll face this. It's all right."

As her fingers clung clinging to his Christy's eyes clung to his eyes.

Cut in UK Imports May Affect U.S. More Than Canada

Argentina Likely to Suffer As Well Says Govt. Official

Ottawa, Aug. 7 (CP)—A Canadian government official said today he believed that Britain's proposed $40,000,000 monthly slash in food imports largely would be made at the expense of United States and Argentina.

Commenting on Prime Minister Attlee's outline of plans yesterday to meet the British economic crisis, the official said Canada's trade would suffer but not to a great extent.

The official said as far as he knew the United Kingdom government has given no indication that it wants another loan from Canada.

The Canadian loan ($1,250,000,000) was not being used up as fast as the loan from the United States, Mount half of the Canadian loan, made last year, was still unused.

The government had not received any indication that a British delegation, scheduled to go to Washington in September, in search of the loan term agreement, would come to Ottawa.

The official said the United Kingdom government must "have felt the necessity" to do what he "pretty grim" when it would force on the people austerity measures greater than those imposed during the war.

Won't Help Dollar Balance

Naturally when Britain's position was critical, Canada, because of her reliance on United Kingdom markets, was placed in a "more dangerous" position. British Labor Minister Ian Mc Leod Canada's adverse dollar balance with the United States.

Britain had been paying for some of her Canadian purchases with gold and United States dollars. This source would become increasingly difficult because Britain's supply of United States dollars would lessen.

The official indicated Canada was not contributing to the difficulty of a dollar loan from the United States although he admitted that the dollar situation was approaching a critical stage. The adverse trade balance with the United States in the first four months of 1947 totalled more than $296,300,000.

Meantime, other officials said they were at a loss for an immediate answer to how Canada would be affected by the austerity program.

Long-Term Contract May Help.

Some expressed hope that Canada's long-term food contracts, covering wheat, bacon, eggs, cheese and canned fruit, with the world shortage of food would save the Dominion from feeling the brunt of the British Government's decision on a new program to preserve her dollar reserves.

But another source said Britain's crisis was such that she might not be able to live up to her long-term agreements with Canada and suggested it might even be necessary for Britain to re-open negotiations with Russia with a view to convincing the soviet to permit cutting down of the present four-power agreement with Canada for 600,000,000 - bushels. This contract has yet three years to run.

The official who did not believe Britain would ask Canada to slash would be greatly affected ar- said that these were mainly food items needed by the United Kingdom and not by Canada because standard of living. However, Britain already has taken some steps to curtail imports from Canada, banning further poultry purchases in this country and giving notice of termination of certain imports of this season's crop.

Seven Extricated By Coast Guard From Seaway Snarl

Cleveland, Aug. 7 (CP)—Lake Erie is being searched from the air and surface today for a 33-year-old business man left lashed to a small capsized motorboat by a friend who swam nine miles to shore during a day in which several persons were rescued from various craft in the stormy lake.

The motorboat was found late last night without any trace of Harold Lester of Cleveland, but his companion, Thomas Cook of Pittsburgh, was taken in to the shore after battling his way to shore for aid. Johnson, a boy swimmer, was left in a life-jacket, Cook said. It took Cook nine hours to reach shore.

Seven other persons were safe in their home ports after coast guard personnel had extricated them from separate adventures involving a cabin cruiser, cork raft and canvas kayak.

In an unusual sequence of events, the coast guard yesterday:

Towed into nearby Nicky Rivers a disabled cabin cruiser which set out Tuesday with five passengers aboard to attempt a crossing from Port Huron, Mich.

Rescued 16-year-old James Carroll of Youngstown, O., from a flooded cork raft nine miles off Ashtabula, O., after strong winds swept his craft into the lake.

Located Herman Niemayer of Pittsburgh and near Ashtabula. He had been reported missing since Monday in an attempt to reach Canada in a kayak. Niemayer told the coast guard he had started several times to cross but finally gave up because of treacherous waters.

All five passengers of the cruiser, owned by Investment executive John A. Kruse, were rescued when a coast guard cutter effected the rescue.

CONSERVATIVES LIKELY TO OPPOSE CRISIS PROGRAM

Group of Left-Wing Labor Members Also Critical and Calls On Dalton for Action

By NORMAN CRESBENE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 7 — (CP)—The Conservative opposition today was expected to vote in the House of Commons against the Labor government's new crisis program, which imposes greater austerity on Britain's people as a means of saving the country from the brink of economic chaos.

The Labor party's huge majority is expected to push through the vote, but the Conservatives probably will vote against it on the grounds that the Labor administration failed to convince them that the government has an adequate program to put Britain back on the road to economic recovery.

The Daily Express said today a group of left-wing Labor members was preparing to vote for the austerity program and had called on Hugh Dalton, Chancellor of the Exchequer, to alter a proposed measure at a party meeting. The Express added that Dalton "has given a promise to the critics" when he speaks later today.

The more work-less imports measure provided by the austerity program are regarded generally as less drastic than expected.

U.K. to Pay for 50 Per Cent Of Canadian Purchases Out of United States Loan

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 7 —(CP)—Hugh Dalton, Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced today in the House of Commons that the United Kingdom has agreed to pay for 50 per cent of its Canadian purchases out of the United States loan as a measure to help the United States with its own serious shortage of United States dollars.

Opening the second day of debate on what Prime Minister Attlee called the most serious economic "Battle of Britain," Dalton disclosed that during the last year $820,000,000 (U.S.) had been spent in Canada, "practically all on food."

Declaring that a heavy drain of United States dollars on the country was created by a growing world-wide dollar shortage, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that in his view the United States credit of $3,750,000,000 would be exhausted probably in October.

The British had stalled off for more than a year the "great storm" which now breaks.

Dalton blamed rising prices in the United States and the resulting increasing surplus of United States purchasing power over United States imports" for the sudden worsening of Britain's economic plight. The situation, he said, "is part of world-wide dollar "famine" caused by the United States' selling to foreign countries more than twice as much as she buys, he continued.

The Cabinet's financial expert said he was willing to criticism by Conservatives and Left-Wing Labor Party members that the Labor government "squandered" the American loan and that Attlee's post-war government-and-welfare program promised "too little, too late."

Dalton said the imports cuts announced yesterday would immediately end the extravagant duplication date of the United States loan. Britain's dollar needs besides the American credit there remained some $500,000,000 of the Canadian credit or $1,250,000,- 000 granted early last year.

"The Canadians, however, have run into a heavy storm just as we have," the Chancellor of the Exchequer continued, "and they are having great difficulty in paying for their imports from the United States with their exports of their own produce.

"Therefore our Canadian friends have been good enough to let us drawing on the credit and we have accepted their offer of it.

"It has been agreed between the Canadian and United Kingdom governments that we shall meet our Canadian dollar expenditure during the next year by drawing on the Canadian credit and that the 50 per cent by drawing upon the United States credit."

Who's "Miss Peterborough" For 1947? Contest Committee Has Job and Half on its Hands

Peterborough, Aug. 7 (CP)— The pros and cons of the Miss Peterborough 1947 beauty contest will continue until after the contest committee decides tonight which of the two winners actually is "Miss Peterborough."

But in Toronto the beauty contest judges had no difficulty at once said today he had the solution to the whole affair.

Conrad Thibault, operatic and concert baritone, who has been a judge at seven Miss America contests in Atlantic City, urged the Peterborough contest officials today with what he believes is the solution of solutions.

"Announce two winners," Mr. Thibault told telegram editor Miss Peterborough and a Mrs. Peterborough.

But despite the all-encompassing authority of Conrad Mr. man who has seen thousands of outstanding beauties — and has been one himself — at which was the most beauteous — the contest committee has a job and a half on its hands tonight.

At eight o'clock the five judges, the contest chairman and the two winners — Mrs. Joyce Meiklejohn, present holder of the crown, and Theresa Sullivan — will present bathing suits, gather to thrash out their problem — when is "Miss Peterborough of 1947?"

There is more than just shapely limbs, posture, poise and assorted attributes of physical beauty to put considered. there is the problem of a miss in the talent division by the master of ceremonies. This led to the announcement that Mrs. Meiklejohn, an adorable long-tressed blonde whose husband and two young children are rooting for her, was the winner. But her judges said their ballots gave tall, brunette Miss Sullivan the title.

Then there is the problem of the two girls and woman can hold the "Miss" title and following on its heels is the fact that Mrs. Meiklejohn is already 26 years ago does not live within the city limits.

Yesterday hurdle No. 4 was thrown in the path of officials when the brunette runner - up said she thought Mrs. Meiklejohn had a "definite edge" in bathing suits. This last statement has caused much confusion. Blonde Joyce says she doesn't begin since it only distributes the "excess" to other parts of the judges' eyes, confused but confused.

The solution known tonight — perhaps after many long hours of deliberation — is Mr. Thibault's suggestion is taken, the meeting might be over by 8:01 p.m.

3 YOUTHS SAFE AFTER BEING REPORTED DEAD

Survive Bad Accident When Canoe Capsizes In Rapids in Upper Petawawa River

Pembroke, Aug. 7 — (CP) — An Ontario Forestry Department official said today three 15-year-old youths believed drowned in the upper Petawawa River last night now were safe and unhurt at their camping grounds near Brent, about 80 miles west of here.

He said he had been talking to one of the three — Herbert Gilbert of Beaver Falls, Pa., Sherman Smith of Bridgeville, Pa., and Michael Senezon of Toronto, all 15 — when the phone but added that connections were not good. However, he had obtained the information that the three youths had ventured after surviving a drenching in rapids which overturned canoes in some rapids.

The youths they had turned up during the night while search parties roamed along the river-in which searchers had expected to find them drowned — and through the bush in Algonquin Park.

Incomplete details of the incident were to the effect that the three youths were in one of three canoes which left Brent to begin their camping site yesterday. They had run into rapids and the others heading toward Catfish Rapids and were not to be found later.

Disobeyed Instructions

Jim Schaffer of Cleveland and S. Hinds of Bowmanville, Ont., reported the fear that they had drowned to Forest Rangers at Brent late last night. Search and the missing three had disobeyed instructions from camp counsellor Dick Prince of Detroit in trying to shoot the rapids. The three was believed to have been shattered on the rocks.

The three were reported found huddled together on the banks of the river shortly after dawn.

Forest Rangers Jack and Norman Mc Donald, leading the search camp site to investigate. They may bring the boys back here when they reach the camp late tonight.

The camper said the incident sprang from a canoe trip the nine had planned from Brent to Lake Opeongo. They were on their way when one of the group fell sick and it was decided to head for Brent.

King - Celebrates 28th Anniversary As Party Leader

Ottawa, Aug. 7 — (CP)—Prime Minister Mackenzie King today celebrated his 28th anniversary as leader of the Liberal party — at work at his summer home at Kingsmere, Que., away from the searing heat here.

No special events were planned and since assembly of the prime minister's health was good. He appeared to have fully recovered from a bout with pneumonia which kept him away from the House of Commons for a month last spring.

Mr. King was chosen leader of the Liberal party Aug. 7, 1919, by the Liberal caucus at the general elections. He was prime minister from Dec. 30, 1921, to June 28, 1926, returning to that office Sept. 25 of that year until Aug. 7, 1930, and from October 23, 1935 until the present time.

Last June 10 Mr. King completed a record — for the Dominion — of 10 years prime minister, should he continue as governor-general until April 30, 1948, he will equal the longest-service record established by Sir Robert Walpole, the British prime minister who served 20 years, 10 months and nine days back in the 18th Century.

In the Commons closed last month Mr. King has spent most of his time in the cooling shade of his Gatineau hills' home. But he was governmental secretaries taking out bundles of correspondence daily along with other matters needing his personal attention.

The cases were believed to be mild with no signs of paralysis in the children and Thibault showing only early symptoms, authorities said today.

Hottest August Finds Islanders Fighting Fires

Halifax, Aug. 7 —(CP)— With Cape Breton Island experiencing the hottest August in its history, three fires were burning today on the Nova Scotia mainland and in Inverness County while woods fires broke out in scattered parts of the Nova Scotia mainland and New Brunswick.

Most serious of the Cape Breton fires was one on Chetticamp Island which has been burning since Tuesday. The farmer-father-in-law of the Acadian village of Chetticamp were still fighting the fire last night and had prevented it from destroying the homes of any of the 15 families who live on the island. The flames have already burned thousands of dollars worth of timber.

The only dwelling seriously threatened was a wooden light-house near the northern tip of the four-miles-long island. The keeper moved his family to safety yesterday.

Pilot Mistakes Flaming Burner For Boston Airport

Craft is Swallowed Up in 20-Foot Wide Stack

Everett, Mass., Aug. 7 (AP)— A small airplane plunged out of a fog-shrouded sky early today into a flaming wasteland because of a monster oil plant—carrying to fiery death its four socially prominent occupants as the pilot apparently thought he was shooting down into bright-lit Boston airport.

The dead were:

Thomas Mandell, 46, treasurer of the Geo. Mandell Air Conditioning Corporation of Boston and son of the late George S. Mandell, publisher of the old Boston Transcript.

Mandell's two debutante daughters—Anne, 22, and Harriot, 19, both of Brookline.

Pilot Nelson Pell, 32-year-old veteran flier and grandson of a socially prominent Long Island, N.Y., family.

Streaming From Montreal

Flying the Mandells back from Montreal, Pell is believed to have become confused in the murky early morning fog and to have mistaken the lights flaring atop huge storage tanks of the Racon Oil Company for those of an airport, fire officials said.

Witnesses said the small Stinson plane crashed into the tanks, dropped into the mouth of the chimney-like furnace 100 feet "into fire" after narrowly missing several towering tanks —containing high explosive petroleum products.

The furnace — resembling a huge brick silo—rises about 50 feet in the heart of the oil plant. The small plane was completely swallowed up as it dropped into the 20-foot wide "field furnace."

An explosion rocked the area as the plane crashed. The blast of one girl fell between the outer and inner walls of the great twelve walled brick and steel cylinder. The other was plunged into the red-hot flaming interior and were burned beyond recognition within a few minutes.

The Mandell plane was 1 1-2 miles off the end of Boston Airport—15 miles away—when it first disappeared, leading the speculate Pell was attempting an emergency landing.

Hopeless Position

Any chance to save the quartet was hopeless. Waste gas being pumped into the furnace was ignited by the crash — shut off and then — through emergency doors—workers dragged with long hooks and hooks to recover the remains of the victims as the interior cooled.

Witnesses reported hearing a plane sputtering overhead a mile from the Beacon oil plant said that it just missed the boiler-house chimney before they expect a record of students when the fall term opens. The increase is especially a record number from the veterans, a total expected to be admitted for the full year in the fall term of about 6,000 probably an all-time high. About half will be war veterans.

SIX ARE DEAD AND TEN MISSING IN SHIP BLAST

Ammonia Nitrate Drums Collide, Setting Fire to Vessel At Melbourne

Melbourne, Aug. 7 —(Reuters)— Six people now are known dead and 10 missing after an explosion in the 10,004-ton British steamship Mahia in Melbourne Victoria docks today.

Bodies of the six dead were recovered from one of the ship's holds and the search for others in the hold is continuing. The fire aboard the Mahia has been extinguished and the ship now is resting on the sea bottom.

The ship's agents estimated the cargo loss at £100,000 ($400,000) and said it would be months before the ship was recommissioned.

The explosion occurred when two drums of sodium chlorate and 200 drums of ammonium nitrate collided. Flames spread through a hold in the ship and menaced the rest of the Mahai's cargo of general merchandise, including newsprint.

All Melbourne's fire brigades raced to the ship but after three hours were called off when there was a danger of the vessel capsizing.

Sodium chlorate is an unstable compound like ammonium bichromate, capable of violently shattering huge tanks storing hundred of thousands of gallons of gasoline, naphtha, kerosine, oil and tar.

Employees at the oil plant said they saw a plane circling overhead before the crash, pleading officials to speculate that Pell was attempting an emergency landing.

He had flown just 10 feet to the left of the furnace chimney, they said, he would have landed in a pond "suitable for an emergency landing."

9,000 AT McGILL

Montreal, Aug. 7 —(CP)— Registration officials at McGill University here said today they expect a record of students when the fall term opens. The increase is especially a record number from the veterans, a total expected to be admitted for the full year in the fall term of about 6,000 probably an all-time high. About half will be war veterans.

Polio Cases in U.S. So Far in 1947 Lower Than During Last Four Years

Washington, Aug. 7 —(AP)— After four bad polio years, a break is in sight for 1947 in the United States — a public health service official reported today.

At the same time, however, he urged the public to observe usual precautions during the rest of the infantile paralysis "season" which runs from June through September.

Reporting a total of 1,955 American cases for the week to Aug. 2, compared with 5,430 for the same period last year, the official told a reporter:

"It is not really too late for a sharp rise — that is, a fairly limited explosive outbreak — a particular local thing in the country. "But, from the figures to date this year, the indication is that the high incidence of the past four years for the country as a whole will be broken."

Full-year case total for those four years were:

1946, second worst epidemic year on record — 20,347. (In 1916, there were approximately 30,000.)

1945 — 12,218 cases.

1943 — 13,440.

This year, since March 15 (the approximate average date of lowest incidence there have been 1,345 cases, compared with 2,742 the same period-a year ago.

For the week ended Aug. 2, there were 219 new cases compared with 187 for the preceding week, and 1,284 for the corresponding week last year.

In 1916, the year of the outbreak — that is, the week with the highest number of new cases — was reached in mid-August.

There were 1,816 cases in that week, but the health service official today "no doubt that the peak week this year will have more than 400 cases."

The public health official should continue to observe such precautions as:

1. Avoiding unnecessary contacts with large groups of people — this is a particular precaution for children.

2. Observing habits of personal cleanliness.

3. Avoiding any strenuous exercise and any sudden exposure to cold water.

4. Calling a doctor in case of unexplained illness.

Night Life for Parisians Thing of Past And Food Prices Are Cause of It

By DONALD WRIGHT
Paris, Aug. 7 — (Reuters) — Night life in Paris for Parisians themselves is a thing of the past and food prices are the cause of it.

Night life in the cafes goes on, as it always did; but Parisians who take part in it are few and far between, almost all the patrons are from overseas.

Parisians have to feel it grim and ironic that, when their own capital is being taken over by lack of money, Paris should be the venue for the International Exhibition of Arts and Crafts, the "save Europe" Economic Conference.

Nowadays, if you enter a cafe for a meal you will neither find the tables empty, or those dining will be American, British or continental visitors. You will seldom find a Parisian and his family there as you did in the old days.

Parisians will take their family to a cafe for a drink; but that is all. They simply cannot afford the prices charged for food.

As one put it:

"I used to have one evening a week in a cafe as a relaxation. Now, if I could afford one evening a month, I would consider myself more fortunate than most Parisians."

The cost of a good meal in a Parisian cafe can easily range from about $5 to anything up to $10 or $12.

If you go to a night club, where there is the usual cabaret, with dancing a band, food dancing thrown in, a bottle of champagne Parisians will be four, it will cost from $20 to $25. A package of cigarets, normally 40 cents, costs about a dollar.

Most British visitors go to a night club once, but with currency restrictions, they cannot afford more visits. American visitors, of course, haven't the same difficulties.

There is no shortage of food in the cafes and night clubs. You can get most of the good things — if you can pay for them.

Most of the food comes from the black market. The only thing that gives you worry over rationing is bread, which is, generally, of poor quality. Hotels serving daily menus insist on the production of a bread coupons, but the night clubs do not bother to collect them.

Plainfield Residents Save Three Trenton Motorists from Possible Death by Fire After Car Crashes

Prompt county work on part of Plainfield residents saved three Trenton young people from possible death by fire at midnight Wednesday when their car failed to make a turn on Highway No. 2 in Plainfield village, left the road, overturning and crashing into a tree and coming to rest against a village store building.

The car was in danger of catching fire after the accident until fast work by Plainfield residents headed by Mrs. Ewart Hodgins who was first on the scene saved the occupants from death by fire.

Seriously injured in the crash were: Harold Stinson, age 18, driver of the car, and Donald Collins, 18 years. Both were rushed to Belleville hospital after being given first aid at the scene by the residents of the village of Roslin. Another passenger in the car, Miss Joan Hall, age 17, also of Trenton suffered minor injuries. The driver was proceeding in a drive yourself car from Trenton.

According to Provincial Constable Sam Orville who investigated the accident the car skidded and ran sideways on the highway, overturned and crashed against the store. Battery cables became red hot from a short circuit from the battery. Hoskins quickly on the scene ripped the battery from the car, averting the inevitable flames and freed the injured persons from the wrecked car.

driven by Julius Bregand, sank as it was speeding around the course. At last ten seconds later Skidoo, driven by J. Cramer, caught fire when the motor blew. The Chomo, driven by J. Lohy, was forced out of the race when engine trouble leaving the Yankee Doodle and the Nit Wit to fight it out for the honors. The Yankee Doodle took first in both heats. Both boats were unofficially entered in the second heat finishing more than a minute behind the first heat pace.

All Canadian Boats.

An all Canadian flavor was added to the Class 225 Division II Class as all the boats and drivers participating were from the lake of the Maple Leaf. And to make everything fitting it was the Maple Leaf, driven by Ed Lee which roared away with the honors. Miss Rupert, driven by Harvey McFarland, placed third in the first heat and second in the second heat. Miss Quinte provided some excitement when her driver, Charlie Abbott, raced the boat in the second heat and a cloud of steam rose thirty feet in the air. It looked as though fire was to claim another victim. The Chomo was forced out of the race by engine trouble and did not finish either heat. The slowest heat of the day was the second heat of this race when the Maple Leaf won in the slow time of eight minutes 40 3-5 seconds.

Bogie's "Blitz II" Wins Fourth Circuit Victory

"Blitz II" scarlet-colored speedboat, piloted by Pictou Gold Cup, driven by Sergt. Bob Bogie, Brockville, RCAF, was the fourth major victory in the Canadian circuit at Alexandria Bay yesterday.

"Blitz" roared over the course in well over sixty miles an hour to win the Alexandria Bay championship by virtue of one first and two seconds for 1,000 points. Dexter Boat Co. of Alexandria Bay came second with two firsts and 800 points.

Doctor Robinson was driving Tops Speedliner, a combination of Tops, Speedliner hull and his own motor. He won the first heat but was forced out of the second heat when a broken rear strut forced him back for the third scramble after losing hurried repairs and left the field. Bogie was second to the Dogfit in the first and third heats and came first in the second heat to win on points.

It was announced at the conclusion of the first heat of this race that Ed Fiore of Belleville was eligible to race. Ed entered the second and third heats and took a second and third respectively behind Bogie. He was driving his new boat, the Maple Leaf, acquired at Gravenhurst this spring.

Official results of the race are as follows:

Miss Prescott	3	3 4
Tops Speedliner	1	1
Blitz II	2	3 2
Miss Quinte ... towed in, no entry
Maple Leaf	2	3

In the Class "D" runabouts a new contender for racing laurels appeared in the person of Wilfred Dumont, in his speed Thunderbird. Dumont beat out the Sagana 8 driven by Frank Foulke in the first heat. The Sagana 8 set a new world's record at the Prince Edward Gold Cup race held at Picton on Civic Holiday but it was unable to overtake the flying Frenchman in the initial heat. Foulke came back strongly in the second heat to beat out the Flyer in a keenly contested battle.

Official Results.

The official results on the race are as follows.

Sagana 8, Frank Foulke	2	1
Jeep, Charles Tiewell	5	6
Miss Quinte, Charles Abbott	5	5
Batman, Doctor Robinson	3	3
The Egg and I, Mike Staffan	4	4
Thunderbird, Wilfred Dumont	1	2
Miss Rugene, H. McFarlane	out

It seemed as though everything happened in the 113 class as two boats sank within ten seconds of each other. Hot Stuff,

Former Residents Avert Possible Drowning Accident

Marmora. —Two former residents of Marmora, now of Deseronto, with presence of mind averted a possible drowning accident on Crowe River about 6.30 p.m. on Tuesday. The two brothers, Herbert and Carleton, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Vandusen are visiting their uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Hilliard McGarvey during Marmora Old Boys' Reunion.

They were at the dam as four American visitors came down the river in a boat. As the boat neared the dam, the motor was suddenly shut off. In the excitement an oar was broken and the boat drifted towards the dam. Carleton Vandusen, with presence of mind, lay along the top of the dam and grabbed the foremost man by the shoulder to temporarily halt the progress of the boat. His brother reached for a rope in the boat and hauled it until the four men got out. By this of further diver mishcovering on the part of the brothers, the boat and motor were saved.

Marmora. —(Special.) — Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Phillips, of Bancroft, are visiting the former's mother, Mrs. Harry Phillips.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Potts and son, Warren, of Cobourg are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Potts.

Magedoma Sold To Picton Resort

The once palatial steam yacht "Magedoma," queen of the Thousand Islands pleasure fleet and formerly owned by the G. T. Pullford estate, Brockville, is destined to end her days as a nautical curiosity in the Bay of Quinte summer resort.

Left in a bad condition as a result of her wartime service as an Ontario training ship for the Royal Canadian Navy, the Magedoma lay in Kingston harbor little more than an abandoned hulk until her recent purchase by Picton interests.

In her heyday the Magedoma carried many parties through the Islands and among her passengers were the Duke of Windsor, and the late Duke of Kent, Sir William Mackenzie, Prince Adalbert King and various other notables.

The yacht emerged from the war with plates warped, splay driven into her mahogany upper works and holes worn in her decks.

Steel Pricing Policies Cannot Be Stabilized

New York, Aug. 7 — (AP) — Steel pricing policies may become "completely demoralized, and stabilized costs out of the question" if scrap prices hold to present "ridiculously high figures", the Iron Age, national metalworking weekly, said today.

Scrap's "inflationary gyrations" surpass even the hectic World War I days" without a sign, "except wishful thinking" that a peak has been reached or a downward scrap price trend will develop soon, the paper said.

The Iron Age steel scrap composite price reached a new high of $41.75 a gross ton, with "spectacular market strength."

The paper reported the average price for finished steel about 10.7 per cent above two weeks ago and 37.5 per cent above the 1939 average.

"For the first time in a good many years major firms in the steel industry this week were operating on a multiple price basis for such products as semifinished steel, galvanized sheets, enameling sheets and long terms," the Iron Age said.

"This customer relationships and strong competition involved in today's steel market, despite the heavy over-all demand, it is unlikely that the price differentials will last very long. There are indications from some sources that independent steelmakers will meet U.S. Steel's lower prices on some items but so far this week the situation was not clear cut."

The Iron Age placed the steel ingot rate at 95 per cent, unchanged from a week ago, but predicted operations will be increased and the average rate will be "at least one to two points higher for some months to come."

Tourist Records

At the height of the 1947 tourist season which will possibly set a record for all time, Ontario's Department of Travel and Publicity has issued its annual report up to the end of March of this year.

Foreign travel in Ontario in the year past showed that over a quarter of a million persons came into this Province by railway, 308,813 by bus, 129,068 by boat and 29,049 by airplane. Travel vehicle permits issued were 930,096 in number.

The report notes, "in assessing the 1946 tourist season, it is significant that although an estimated fourteen million persons from the United States alone visited the Province for varying periods, there were fewer than 30 actual complaints registered with the department. All of these were carefully investigated and where warranted, action was taken to assist in securing redress.

"Due credit is given by the Province to other agencies, the Canadian Travel Bureau, transportation and hotel companies, operators' associations, regional groups and chambers of commerce which were very energetic in their efforts to stimulate the flow of visitors. This indicates the advantage of co-operation and shows how the combination of so many forms of this effort intensifies the response and interest of the intending visitor.

The financial benefit of the tourist trade is difficult to arrive at definitely. Preliminary estimate puts the value of the 1946 tourist trade in Ontario at somewhere in the neighborhood of $110,000,000 but there is no way of appraising amount of money left in Ontario by visitors or by Ontario people who find the 412,000 square miles of their own Province offers everything necessary for an enjoyable vacation."

The whole report reveals the importance of this habit of touring in intensifying the friendship of two peoples and in using the natural advantages of this country to bring in wealth while those who spend are getting more than their worth of enjoyment and pleasure.

More Sacrifices

Steps that are drastic and indicate the nature of the austerity which Britons are to expect in order to ease the economic crisis have been outlined by Prime Minister Attlee of Britain. To a tired people who gave of their strength and courage and faith for the defence of the world against aggression and who even last winter and spring had to pass through the trying ordeal of weather conditions which caused very heavy losses to agriculture and to the livestock industry, the speech of the Prime Minister shows the hope and faith that are in Britain.

The steps mean the reduction of armed forces, a certain direction of labor in longer hours of work and limiting of employment in non-essential industries, the cutting down of imports that will be a hardship to many and reduction of foreign travel allowance.

The very heavy nature of the load indicates the faith of all people in their nation's future for they have the past to show what their genius has meant to the world and they will buckle down to the task with a will.

Britain and Reading

Britain needs books. Among shortages books are in a prominent position. The causes are war's destructiveness, and the sequel to the struggle, namely labor, machinery and material shortage. London needs a million books for schools and libraries are short and little business is doing at the bookstands.

While Britain endeavored to keep up with the reading requirements of the people during the war and issued wartime editions which showed the necessity for these "austerity" editions, even then the output was falling behind and the need was growing. Today there is a need for new novels, biographies and educational books. Not only are labor and paper short, but the printers' presses deteriorated in the lean time of war.

Britain paid in part for her share in preserving civilization by the loss of twenty million volumes in bomb raids. Efforts are being made to ease the situation and satisfy the crying need for books, but return to anything like normalcy seems a long way off.

In the United States books with English copyrights are being published and there will be a flow of literature back across the

The British people in the days of peace turned out many fine editions of books which have been admired the world over and enjoyed a remarkable trade. Like everything the English artisan puts his mind on and his hand to, the books he has issued are worthy products of the British genius. There is a good reason for this, the English, Scots, Irish and Welsh are good readers, have a literature of their own of world greatness and have responded to the demands for the valuable literatures which the long past and nations of recent times have produced. British attention to books is one of the signs of British culture and breadth of thought in national and international affairs.

The Slow Driver

If the facts could be known it might be proved that as many traffic accidents are caused by slow drivers as by the speeders.

By "slow" drivers we do not mean those who keep to a safe twenty or twenty-five on city streets, and less as circumstances warrant, and who find forty a reasonable cruising speed on a clear country road. We think of the chap who holds up a line of cars on the Driveway these fine evenings by dawdling along at 12 to 15 miles per hour, or on a Sunday afternoon keeps to a placid twenty on a highway while the line behind him grows steadily in numbers and impatience.

It is a breach of the Ontario Traffic Act to drive "at such a slow rate of speed as to impede or block the normal and reasonable movement of traffic thereon," and that is right because that sort of driving is a menace to the public safety. The danger comes, of course, when the cars thus held up try to pass the dawdler, which is always a risky business even in moderate traffic if the road is of merely conventional width.

Streets and roads are for the safe use of all the people, and the dawdler is a menace when he blocks cars which want to travel at "normal and reasonable" speed. Drivers of this sort ought to have more attention from the police. — Ottawa Journal.

No More Privacy

These are thin times for the old-fashioned person who hankers to go his own gait, paddle his own canoe, tend her own knitting and hoe his own row. This isolationist point of view gets ready sympathy for its nostalgic charm, but events are against it. Isolationism turned out to be unworkable for the United States of America, it becomes more and more an impossibility for even the most never-hurt-anybody and leave-me-alone individual.

It would now be a rare spot around the globe where a man could dodge being involved in some sort of human organization. Well back in a jungle he might avoid having to join a service club, but some country will doubtless claim him eventually, and get after him to fill out forms and pay taxes. In 1942 the islands of the South Pacific suddenly became inferior locations for getting away from it all. And now the Arctic refugee from civilization, minding his own business of sneaking up on a seal, finds himself right in the middle between Russia and the U. S. Here and there are various abandoned mine workings to hide in until union rules require one to come up, but in general even though a man may not choose to be his brother's keeper, his brother insists on keeping after him, and keeping him on the run. The fellowship of man is being forced on everybody. — The Printed Page.

JUST FOLKS

THE FORTUNE LEAVER

If the dead hear living voices, and I think perhaps they do,
He must have heard them wondering how so large his fortune grew.
He must have heard them saying:
"With so much to us denied,
It's amazing to discover all this money put aside!"

The dead man may have shuddered
as he heard a loved one say:
"These are things we used to ask for,
he refused from day to day.
He said he couldn't buy them, and he bade us be content.
That he could have bought, but wouldn't, now we find is what he meant."

It could be that he regretted, as he heard them counting there,
Every joy he could have granted, but the money wouldn't spare.
And perhaps the dead man wondered in the silence of the grave,
How he'd ever got the notion every dollar he must save.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

What did Ethan Allen say at Ticonderoga?

Early in the morning of May 10, 1775, less than a month after the Battle of Lexington, Ethan Allen and 83 Green Mountain Boys, accompanied by Benedict Arnold, surprised and captured Fort Ticonderoga on Lake Champlain and its garrison of about 50 British soldiers commanded by Captain William Lelaplace.

The story is that when Lieut. Joselyn Feltham, undressed at the head of a stairs, demanded by what authority Allen had entered His Majesty's fort, he replied: "In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress."

Although the reply is characteristic of Allen, some historians doubt that he used those exact words. There is no evidence that the reputed reply was current immediately after the incident. Several of the Green Mountain Boys who had been present could recollect afterwards only that their Colonel had said something or other that was profane and unprintable. Capt. Delaplace and Lieut. Feltham made no mention in their reports of what Allen had said in reply to the Lieutenant's demand.

In the fall of 1775 Allen led an expedition into Canada and was taken prisoner while attempting a surprise attack on Montreal. He was a prisoner of war until 1778 when he was exchanged and returned to Vermont. The famous words attributed to him at "Fort Ti" did not appear in print until 1779, when he wrote his own spicy account of the incident. Most of the men who had been with him at Ticonderoga were still living and apparently none of them protested against the accuracy of his version.

A later writer observed that Allen demanded the surrender in the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress "in spite of the fact that he held a commission from neither source."

Two days after the capture of Fort Ticonderoga, Seth Warner took Crown Point. These two victories were important because they deprived the British of two strategic forts, raised American morale and provided the Continental Army with 150 cannon that enabled General Washington to force the British to evacuate Boston nearly a year later.

SAFE MILK AND SAFE DRINKING WATER FOR TOURISTS AND VACATIONISTS

A reader planning an automobile and camping tour asks how to make water safe to drink in wayside places and small villages.

If the water is safe for the residents it is safe for visitors. Water from a well, spring or lake or stream is safe for you or me if it is safe for people who use it for drinking, but if there is any doubt about it, better boil the water and be sure.

In an emergency questionable water may be disinfected with chlorine to make it safe to drink, that is, if boiling is out of the question.

For disinfection drinking water during a longer period of camping, for instance, use chlorine solution prepared as follows:

From a freshly opened tin or can of "chloride of lime" (chlorinated lime, calcium hypochlorite) put one teaspoonful of the pungent chemical into a quart of water in tightly stoppered bottle and let stand over night. Next day it is ready for use — a teaspoonful of the clear solution poured off without disturbing any sediment in the bottle, will disinfect two gallons of water for drinking purposes if stirred in the water and allowed to stand for fifteen minutes.

Chlorine disinfection of course gives the characteristic tests of chlorine to the water. If that is intolerable for the period of the emergency, then (1) drink only boiled water or (2) anticipate the need and carry with you enough drinking water of known potability.

The chief if not the only danger involved in drinking water which may possibly be polluted is typhoid or dysentery infection. Every tourist, camper or vacationist planning a sojourn in the wilds, should follow the rule that travellers to Mexico, Central and South America are required to follow—be immunized against typhoid and paratyphoid, preferably a few months before the journey, for it requires at least six weeks to two months for the full protective degree of immunity to develop after the typho-paratypho-A and paratypho-B bacterin ("vaccine") is injected.

There is no effective immunization against dysentry, either bacillary or amebic dysentery. Both kinds of dysentery may be contracted not only by drinking polluted water or by using even enough to moisten a toothbrush but by eating salad, raw vegetables, raw fruit or greens that are washed with polluted water.

The question of safe milk is far more important today than the question of safe drinking water, for travellers, tourists, campers or picnickers spending a few hours out in the country. Ordinarily if pasteurized milk is obtainable, in the unopened bottle, it is as safe in the country as it is in town, and most people know from long experience that pasteurized milk is safe for daily consumption. If the milk available away from home is not sold, delivered or served in the original bottle bearing the pasteurized label, or cream either, then the only safe course is to reject it or scald it — heat to boiling point for one minute. Scalding makes any milk safe.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Home Made Iron Tonic

I have taken your home made iron tonic with excellent results. You recommended garnet-red scales — all I have been able to get is either green or brown scales. Is there any difference?
(Mrs. K. J. E.)

Answer—No great difference, although if you can get the garnet-red scales they make a prettier solution, don't you think? Full instructions for preparing and using the home-made iron tonic are given in the booklet "Blood and Health" — for copy send twenty cents and stamped self addressed envelope — and please omit clipping and messy stickum.

Cross Eye

I am contemplating marriage. I had a slight cross in my left eye which has been corrected through an operation and glasses. Is that likely to be transmitted to my children? That is, are cross eyes hereditary?
(W. E. J.)

Answer — Only defects or abnormalities present at birth are likely to be transmitted to children. If the cross-eye was acquired after birth, it is not heritable.

Child Recovers From Accident

Ivanhoe — (Special) — The many friends of little Jean Mayo, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mayo, Minto, will be glad to learn that she has recovered sufficiently from her accident ten days ago to be brought to her home from Belleville General Hospital, where she was being attended by Dr. G. Stobie.

The Mayo family were busy hauling hay and when they reached the barn an older sister not knowing that anyone was near threw a loading fork to the ground just in time to strike Jean on the left breast. It pierced the bone and punctured the lung causing severe suffering. She was rushed to the hospital but when a X-Ray was taken the wound was found to be less serious than was at first feared.

FILLED WITH BEER

Chicago, Aug. 7—(AP)— The water cooler emptied quickly at the Rubinstein wholesale upholstery company yesterday as the heat wave continued a third day, and no more bottled water was available.

President Bill Rubenstein solved the problem, apparently to the satisfaction of all employees. He filled the empty water bottle with cold beer.

Rawdon

Mrs. Frank Young Honored Before Leaving District

Rawdon—(Special)— Recently friends of Mount Pleasant Community met to present Mrs. Frank Young and George, with a combination telephone desk and chair, and with a maroon Axminster scatter rug, in appreciation of their services in this district.

The "Young" home has long been one of the landmarks in this community, and as long as her health permitted, Mrs. Young took an active part in all church work. George has given freely of his time and talents in several very successful plays, and his friends here have greatly appreciated his dramatic ability.

An address of appreciation was read by Mrs. Roy Thrasher, which, on behalf of friends and neighbors, was signed by Mrs. Ross Hoard, Mrs. Cyrus Summers, Mrs. Raymond McConnell, Mrs. Roy Thrasher and by Messrs. Allen Reid and Lorne White.

Mrs. Young graciously expressed her thanks for the lovely gifts, and said she and George will welcome visits from their friends at their home in Stirling.

French Fashions Keep Austerity Rules in Mind

Paris, Aug. 7 (AP) — Capt. Molyneux seems to have kept in mind the austerity rules still prevailing in Britain for the designing of his Paris fall collection.

Molyneux also has a house in London, and it is he who makes dresses for the Royal household.

His is a typical English way of tailoring clothes, especially tailored suits and morning dresses. He wants them practical and snug and he likes women to show their legs. None of his skirts, except of course dinner and evening gowns, go below mid-calf.

As for coats, they have drooping shoulders, very large armholes, and they are buttonless. They are in thick wooly material, in pale shades of yellow beige, or gray astrakan or shell-colored fox.

Evening dresses are more fanciful, with black spangles here and there, and heavy black silk embroidery on small velvet boleros. Bodices are close fitting with large square decolletes, and the skirt billowing from a line halfway between the waistline and the hipline.

MISCELLANEOUS SHOWER

6th Sidney—On Monday evening about 100 friends gathered at the home of Mrs. Vera Sine for a miscellaneous shower in honor of her daughter, Mrs. Gordon Richardson and Mr. Richardson.

With Rev. H. H. Hillis, of Belleville, a former pastor of Sidney circuit, as chairman, a short program as presented, opening with community singing led by Mr. J. Lott.

Three piano solos given by Cameron Sine, Rhea Rose and Vera Sine respectively, were much enjoyed. Mrs. Morley Sine gave a reading, and Mrs. J. A. Dress Designer Shows Variety Of Gowns For Fall

Paris, Aug. 7—(AP)—Maggy Rouff, usually known for her staidness of design, surprised a packed press audience last night with a fall fashion collection which launched a variety of chic wearable day dresses and delectable evening gowns.

She has rejected completely the "barrell" silhouette which the fashion tipsters are backing as the season's favorite.

Her silhouette, based mainly on the princess line, is flattering and, for the noncorpulent ones, easy to wear. It accentuates the waist and bust and allows graceful leg movement.

Most of her skirts have fullness falling from midhips, promoted by pressed or unpressed pleats and occasionally by gathers strung from a fitting hip yoke. Her shoulders span is wide and slightly rounded.

Necklines range from high sophisticated throat height to wedge and roundshaped, revealing lowness. Lengths are fairly static, jackets are knuckle length, skirts only slightly below the calf and evening gowns are an agreeable ground level.

Evening gowns come with billowing semi-crinoline skirts, often with a contrasting petticoat peeping from beneath the hemline, as well as intricately swathed Grecian drapery.

Hats were conspicuously absent from the entire collection.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Akoslap Expert does not like card cheating; about the worst form of Horse Sense. He says, "cards mysel' considerin' harping on the subject. True, my aim is to incite some of the mooves any cards of mine is wrong.

Finding no adequate argument, Akoslap says to me: "All you do is plug basics, basics, basics. Take the basics of any system and what have you?"

What have you indeed. Without the basics, a bridge system turns into a guessing contest. That's just what I have been beefing about, but many players have no little knowledge of basics.

Without the basics, players must rely on instinct. Take the "in" out of the last word and it describes that many players. Many a bridge player would do better if he had some basics provided for him.

Until the cows come home, you hear me harpin' on the importance of getting rid of a "4-KAN; take-out" double when you're void in a suit of convincing. And some of them are awfully stubborn boys.

My opening bid was the heart with 4 cards and what a diminimum for such a start! Akoslap was my partner and he responded with one no-trump (when he held the hand shown here:

♠ K Q 7 2
♥ A 10 9 7
♦ Q 9 3
♣ K Q 4

With nothing more to show, I passed. We missed a cinch game in no-trump, of course. And I jumped down my partner's throat for failing to give him another chance to bid.

In the first place, a takeout to a 4-card suit is strong for-one round. A response of one no-trump is negative, holding little else in hand. He could have taken it out to that sixth-and-total 4-K-Q-J-10. Then I would have sheep me his additional values.

He knows what his hand contains. Unless he tells me, there is no chance for me to know. How was I supposed to know he had that much? I'm good. But not that good.

The Movie Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, Aug. 7—(AP)—If the movies continue to improve, they will be able to deal with Saroyan stories. This comes direct from William Saroyan, the fluent Fresno philosopher.

The writer bounced into Hollywood to see what the Cagneys are doing to his prize play, "The Time of Your Life". He was pleased with the progress, much more so than with what MGM did to his "One Human Comedy".

"They changed it around so much that the complete tone of the book was lost," he complained. "It turned out to be mushy and 'Hollywood'."

He told of an executives meeting at MGM prior to the filming. One bigwig declared: "The book is swell, my wife loved it, but it's not for the screen. Let's change it around."

Saroyan was horrified. "I'll be there," he said, "to see that you don't change it around."

He was told of an executive who said: "Bill Saroyan, you're not going to tell us how to make pictures. We're the experts. We know what the public wants. We're going to change it around."

Saroyan shrieked: "I'll be there to see that you don't change it around."

Actually, the public demands little of the movies, except a place to send a date and a comfortable seat during the worst films, and I go along. I love the darn things. His advice to Hollywood is to make more comedies.

Claudette Colbert isn't worried about the much-heralded changes in women's fashions. She only has major difference she sees is long skirts instead of short ones. Ralph Bellamy had better finish "The Secretary was indiscreet" in time, or he'll have two unhappy females on his hands. Both Ella Raines and Arleen Whelan went to Joan Bennett's wedding in the East.

Errol Flynn's assistant "Silver Rivers" and flew with Nora Eddington when he'll vacation on his estate in Port Antonio, Jamaica.

Jack Carson has a novel plumbing fixture in his home. Each week he'll play different tunes on it. Some, equipped with plumbing, will get a laugh for him in pictures, he will be proficient at tuning—and shorthand—and I haven't thrown away my tap dancing," he added.

They're getting the most out of love, in the lovin'est hit in years!

Kenneth-Katan Here For Friday Bout

Ken Kenneth, the New Zealand champion and Struggler Bob Wagner entered in the city this morning fresh from their bouts in Kingston last night. Both are looking for drawing spots and will need lodging and Friday bars reckoning the bats and muskie.

Slipping his morning jaws in a quick reassurance the blonde New Zealander lightly tossed aside the pretentious but defeat at the hands of John Katan in Memorial Arena Friday evening.

"It lifted a case of beating Katan alone," he smiled between bits of toast, "but Gene referees apparently do not like my style. Last week it was pure dinkum dirty berry and Friday I have reckoning the bats and muskie."

TORONTO YACHTS READY TO START FOR GEORGE CUP

Aphrodite and The Question Will Represent Yachting Clubs of Canada

Rochester, N.Y., Aug. 7 (AP)—Fifteen racing yachts, including Toronto, compete today for the venerable Silas George Cup, objective of International Yachting on Lake Ontario, for more than 40 years.

The yachts are scheduled to sail 18-mile courses laid out by the judges, with the winner decided Friday at the close of the third and final race.

The host Rochester Club, defending the trophy, is seeking its third victory in a row with the yacht Circe, skippered by John Obenbeck, Jr. The cup has reposed in the Rochester Club House since 1939 when it was won by Bill Barrows, the only man ever to skipper three George Cup winners.

Last year, when racing was resumed after a six-year lapse, the cup was captured by the Rochester-owned Meteor, with Howard Kiligord at the tiller.

This year, however, the Meteor bowed to the Circe in elimination events held to select the Rochester entry. And, by its victory in the Meteor, the Circe also became the favorite for the cup.

Toronto Challengers are Aphrodite, representing the Royal Canadian Yacht Club and skipped by Robert H. F. Barr, and the Question, of the Queen City Yacht Club, handled by A. J. A. Simons.

The George Cup dates back to 1907 when it was donated by Brigadier General the late Silas George of the Crescent Yacht Club at Watertown. In 1935, when "E" Class Yachts had almost disappeared from the lake, the trophy was deeded by the trustees for six-metre competition.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE E. CARTER, Sports Editor

Up in Hanover, Ont., where the good folks of that town are now celebrating the Dominion week, the sycamore of all eyes, especially those of the sports fraternity is a wild-mannered gentleman wearing the clerical garb of the Universal Brotherhood of Light, "the church built on the rock of faith and truth."

Oldtime Hanoverians summoned this sixty-six year old gentleman of sagacity and fun for stories of his past life. A native son, (he was born there in 1881) the tousled visitor would question the proud statement of the villagers that he is none other than Tommy Burns, better known by his ring title of Tommy Burns, only Canadian to hold the world's heavyweight championship crown.

However, that is the truth, and Mr. Burns has journeyed all the way from his Californian home to visit the scenes of his boyhood and the starting stone to a meteoric boxing career that ended with the top rung of the pugilistic ladder.

Modern sports fans especially those of the boxing ilk who are fain to boast that champion Joe Louis has defended his title six times in ten years, may be surprised to know that Burns not only defended his crown, 16 times in two years and 10 months but is the only champion to defend the battle in a foreign country, under the Marquis of Queensberry rules.

Tommy was an outstanding lacrosse player in his younger days in Hanover. In the last game he played, he scored a surprising goal. Caught behind the net and hemmed in by two opposing players, he coolly climbed up the back of the net and dropped the ball behind the surprised goalkeeper.

Later he left for Detroit where he became interested in the game of golf and defence. It wasn't long before the 5 foot seven inch Hanoverian reached the top in amateur box circles. Then, he turned professional. On Feb. 23, 1906 he defeated Marvin Hart to win the heavyweight title of the world. Eleven months previous Hart had won the crown with a 20-round decision over Jack Johnson.

But Burns' title was disputed by Philadelphia Jack O'Brien who had knocked out Bob Fitzsimmons and from whom James J. Jeffries won the title. Burns met O'Brien in a 20-round bout on Nov. 24, 1906. The contest was declared a draw although Burns got the newspaper decision. On May 8, 1907 the pair met again and this time Burns decisively defeated O'Brien.

In 1908 Burns was matched with Tommy Ryan for a title fight in Sydney, Australia. The purse was $50,000, a record sum for the time. The fight was scheduled for Christmas Day in Sydney Stadium before a huge crowd of spectators. Johnson was six feet tall weighing 203 pounds and Burns stood 5" and stepped the scales at 167½. From the outset Johnson forced the fight and gave Burns a terrific beating. He stopped the affair in the 14th round.

Burns was one of the rarities of fighting who used their brains when outweighed or other odds were against them. Many times Burns pulled the victory irons out of the fire by magnificent out boxing strategy both before and during the fight. He had the ability to think fast, and follow his thoughts with as rapid action.

An illustration of this is Burns' fight with Marvin Hart from whom he won the world's title. Hart at that time had no fear of any opposition. In fact like the present era, there was no logical contender for the heavyweight honors. But Hart liked the taste of fighting money. He loved the green color of the "dollars". The jingle of coins was music to his mercenary-loving ears. The idea of fighting Burns, only a middleweight, appealed to him. Hart was bigger and stronger than Burns, and fast, the fact that Burns consistently avoided Hart's every blow would never have occurred.

Tommy was attempting the impossible — buying Lee Angeles property on the instalment plan — and playing the ponies. He lost his yearly cash and stood to lose his property because he couldn't meet the necessary payments.

But the canny Hart and his canny manager Jack Curley, of Boston fame, knew the set-up. Tom McCarey, Los Angeles promoter told Burns he was accepting the fight on a 50-50 or 60-40 basis with the big end going to the victor. But shrewd Carley realized the best in these terms and said 75-25 or nothing. The papers had been full of publicity regarding the fight. The countryside was agog over the forthcoming match. It was the talk of the town. Burns knew he could not withdraw in face of this, and signed the articles on that basis.

Burns learned that Hart was very short-tempered. And with this he set himself to begin to plan his strategy.

The night of the fight the two men climbed into the ring and made a startling contrast with Hart towering over the latter. He looked as if Burns had no chance although he had pronounced reach for a man of his stature. On his hands Burns had a lot of extra bandages, which he had wrapped on for a purpose. Hart came over to his corner, loomed over and objected strongly to the bandages. "You've gotta take some of 'dat off," he roared.

Burns replied mildly, "But it's the same amount as my opponent against middleweights." "I don't care. Take it off," growled Hart.

Burns kept talking in a soft-voiced way until he had the attention of every fan in the house. When he sensed the right moment had arrived, he pushed Hart away and shouted "C'mon. Go back to your corner!" And then he ducked as if Hart was threatening to take a punch at him.

The by-play had its effect. The crowd was convinced that Hart was trying to bluff the smart Burns and rose to rain a chorus of boos, hisses and catcalls on the champion's head. Hart took offstart in his usual way, saw his meaning smile on Burns' face and lost his temper. Burns had his goat at the start, a very important item in a prize fight. He wanted that to rush in wildly and waste his strength; he was counting that Hart and fatigued he could evade his rushes.

Burns landed Hart all through the fight. In the fifth round he closed Hart's right eye. Thereafter it was the blind side he landed some blue-ribbon punches. He felled the champion in the 14th round. From then on he bored consistently, won the decision the championship and 75 per cent of the purse.

From there, Burns went on to defeat 9 Philadelphia Jack O'Brien, Bill Squires, the Australian champion and Gunner Moir the English little-holder. His last battle was in 1920 and when he finally hung up the gloves he had fought 58 fights. He won 36 by knockouts, claimed nine decisions, and one draw while losing four times and being knocked out once, about went to "no-decision."

ST. LOUIS CARDS MAKE IT TOUGH FOR BROOKLYN

Only Five Games Off the Pace and Winner of Last Six Starts

By JOE REICHLER
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

The frantic Brooklyn citizenry was wondering today whether the Dodgers would sign an affidavit to the effect that the current dodgers "couldn't dodge" which has dropped five of its last six games, is the same much-alive body which boasted a 10-game lead only a week ago.

Last night Boston Braves made it two out of three with a 7-0 victory over the Brooks, the same bunch who entered St. Louis last week with a seven-game lead and walloped the runner-up Cards three straight times apparently to sew up the National League flag.

While Brooklyn has been getting behind nine straight times in Chicago and twice in three starts in Boston, the Redbirds have roared back with six straight victories including last night's 6-3 win over Cincinnati, to trail by five games.

While the Brooks boast a five-game bulge, actually they lead by only three in the loss column, the odds to be watched from now on. They played four games more than the Cards.

With Lanier, the Pacific Coast League rookie righthander continuing his excellent mound work, the Giants knocked off the last-place Philadelphia Phillies 5-2 in a daylight game at the Polo Grounds. Three unearned runs in the fifth inning won for the Giants who now trail the Dodgers by only six games.

Pittsburgh Pirates snapped a 2-2 tie with a three-run rally in the sixth and added two more in the ninth to defeat the Cubs in Chicago 7-2.

Bobo Newsom suffered his first setback with the New York Yankees since the athletics nipped the Bronx Bombers 5-3 in Philadelphia.

Detroit Tigers took both ends of a doubleheader from Cleveland Indians 13-8 and 7-5. A nine-run eighth inning won the opener for the Bengals. Bobby Feller started for the tribe but left in the seventh inning with a 6-4 lead. Boston Stephens was the loser.

Boston Red Sox dropped behind the Yankees as Washington beat them for the second straight night, 4-3. Jeff Micheal Haefner limited the Red Sox to five hits.

Chicago White Sox bunched 5 of their 10 hits in the second inning to score five runs and defeat the Browns in a night game in St. Louis 7-4.

Canadian Golf Pros Prepare For Tournament

Toronto, Aug. 7 — (CP) — Canadian golf pros are preparing earnestly this week for the Millar Trophy competition at Guelph's Cutten Fields course Aug. 14-16 when more than 70 top - flight Canadian professionals will tee-off in the tournament that ranks just behind the Canadian Open in prestige, color and golfing nomph.

The competition is being held for the second time for the first time in its long history and the Redbirds Cutten Field's course is being selected for the event. Featuring long, unobstructed fairways and well trapped greens, the Guelph course presents a difficult test for the Canadian golfing experts who will ramble in the quest of the trophy.

Open only to members of the Canadian Professional Golfers' Association this is the 30th year of the tournament. The tourney had its origin in a suggestion by "Cap" Millar of Toronto Islington who approached George Cumming in 1927 with the thought that he would like to hold a Canadian professional's tournament.

The first was held in '28.

Several Canadian stars won the cup more than once with Lex Robson of the Kawartha Lakes Club the leader with six inscriptions on the trophy.

Jimmy Johnstone and Bill Kerr are other more-than-once winners both having taken the match twice, and Bobby Gray of Scarboro has copped the hardware a trio of times. Others include Stan Kerr, Gordon Brydson, Dick Borthwick, Sam Kerr and Willie Lamb — a veritable roster of Canadian all-time golfing greats — all of whom are entered in the '47 match.

Opening day will present 36 holes of qualifying medal play to be followed by match play the remaining two days.

TELL OF CANADA'S IMPORTANCE IN THE MODERN WORLD
20 years ago there was none . . . ten years ago only four . . . TODAY there are 24 Ambassadors, High Commissioners and Ministers representing their governments at Canada's capital. Striking evidence, that, of Canada's new place among modern nations!
We emerged from the war a far greater country than we ever were in pre-war days. Peacetime accomplishments are maintaining that new greatness today.
In the 30's we had a High Commissioner in London, and an Agent-General in Paris. Now but we had little say in our foreign affairs. Canada negotiated with foreign powers through the British Foreign Office, with Empire countries through the British Colonial Office.
In World War I Canada won the right to a separate signature to the Treaty of Versailles. That made 1919 an important date for us. Then, in 1931, we and the other Dominions gained recognition as equal partners with the United Kingdom.
World War II...Canada's achievements in battle overseas and in production at home won us world recognition as a modern power. The great majority of the embassies in Ottawa were established during the war years.

Dafoe Demonstrates Victory Over "Chief" Emerson Charles In Recent Tourney No Fluke

Trenton Welterweight Pounds Out Clear-Cut Decision In Canadian Legion Show at Memorial Arena

Glen Dafoe, Trenton welterweight slugging star and Prince Edward Golden Gloves champion and winner of the Hiram Walker Trophy, demonstrated last night that his victory over "Chief" Emerson Charles, Cobourg, in the recent tournament was no flash-in-the-pan.

For in the next a five - round boxing match as fast been seen here in many a time Dafoe won a clear-cut decision over the Cobourg welter in the main bout of the second Canadian Legion boxing show of the season.

And the severest critic of all the boxing public gave its approval after referee Chuck Murphy of Toronto announced the winner. Dafoe fought in consistently aggressive fight and his style was no match for the one he demonstrated in the Gloves tournament as Charles was below his exhibition.

The champion bored in from the first gong and his swinging right landed with telling effect. Charles however, when he used it, met a punishing left jab that rocked the champion on numerous occasions. But his punches could have been timed and given more control the clinches when he could have got inside the Dafoe right.

Slackened His Attack

Charles was not in the best of condition and he noticeably slackened his attack toward the end of each round and particularly in the second and fifth. But the margin of defeat was not great and given more training and condition the Cobourg Indian will give any welterweight in this part of Ontario a run for his money.

The bout was full of action with both fighters going at it hammer and tongs throughout the entire five rounds. Dafoe landed his punches at less frealkin right which sounds as though it was easy for open gloves but doesn't with telling effect. He used both a body and head attack and his speed in and out in tactics and aggressive effort won him a decision.

Jerry Downes Wins

In the semi-final Jerry Downes of this city won a technical knockout over Gunner Coughlin, Golden Gloves winner in a bout that saw the Picton artillery sergeant go down for counts on three different occasions. Downes' punishing head attack sent the army fighter down for eight in the first round, nine in th second and in the third three solid rights to the jaw sent Coughlin to the canvas where he stayed until his seconds threw in the towel in the ring.

Downes with his weaving style sent rights and lefts to the soldier's head in the first round but Coughlin came back with jolts to the jaw. The two rounds were hard-fought with plenty of action and Downes had too much on the ball for the Pictonian and slugged out a next T.K.O.

Plucky "Soup" Mondeville of Belleville giving away height, weight an dreach got a draw with Sergeant Art Naylor of Toronto in the 135 pound division. Mondeville flailed away at Naylor inside his guard and consistently carried the fight to his heavier opponent. The judges split their decision at the end of the bout each round scored a different in the deciding vote announced a draw.

Falls to Weather Storm

Lyle LaBrash, Belleville faller to weather the flailing fists of Frankie Morris of Toronto and the more experienced city-fighter went down for the count of seven in the first round before LaBrash's seconds leaned in the ring. In the second round, LaBrash fought steadily to the finish but the bout was no match for the easy punishing style of Morris.

Al Rowland, Toronto, exclaimed Golden Gloves winner; Ray Lunn and Gus Rubicini of the Ninth in the best with the referee again handed down a draw decision.

Gus Rubicini and Frank Sanelli of Toronto provided a bout that should have been a good exhibition affair but the latter did not meet with the approval of Referee Crawford and he stopped the bout with a "no contest" decision in the third round.

Protests Decision In Beauty Contest At Peterborough

Peterboro, Aug. 7 — (CP) — Pretty Theresa Gosselin of this city is not quite sure whether marriage has made Mrs. Paul Meiklejohn prettier, but Miss Gosselin's attractive girdle Mrs. Meiklejohn wore under her bathing suit helped her win the title of the "Miss Peterboro of 1947" contest.

But Miss Gosselin's protest was not the first difficulty the beauty contest judges ran into. They had their troubles Monday when everybody crowded the ballots. Now with the runner-up's charges that the winner is a married woman and "wore a foundation garment" the contest committee will meet again tomorrow night to get this thing straightened out.

BATAWA SHOEMEN DEFEAT R.C.A.F. SQUAD BY 14-7

Flyers Use Three Hurlers in Attempt to Stop Onslaught of Bingles

Unleashing a savage batting attack in the fourth and eighth innings, which netted them six and five runs respectively the Batawa Shoemen avenged their recent 2-1 defeat at the hands of the Trenton Flyers at the Eldon Hall Ball Diamond here last night, turning back the Airmen by a 14-7 score.

Flyers' new line-up failed in their attempt to halt the onslaught of the Bata bats which beat out 14 merry tattoo at the expense of all three, smashing out eighteen safeties all told five of them the extra base variety.

Curtis easayed the starting mound role for Flyers and lasted but two innings when he was knocked for seven hits and four runs. Purdy was rushed into the breach and he lasted the next five innings being touched for ten hits and nine runs, Holdershaw was the only Flyer to go the limit after ramming Shoemeet to one hit but the damage was done.

Batawa scored a single run in the first and third innings before exploding viciously in the fourth. Six hits including doubles by Aquino and Burtt sent a half-dozen Bata runners scampering across the plate and the issue was practically over as far as Flyers were concerned.

Score 5 in Fifth

They added another in the fifth and another in the sixth and by way of cleaning up in a proper manner broke out in another big-inning rush in the eighth when five clouts sent an equal number of runs across the platter.

Watson, Batawa shortstop established the scene for of a record with the hickory, smashing out five safeties one a triple in five trips to the plate. Close behind him were Cook and Aquino who had four safeties apiece, Aquino getting a brace of doubles, Burtt and Peacock got two hits apiece.

Bridgeman got a pair of clouts for the Flyers as well as recording a neat double play with first baseman Dunning.

U.S. PLAYER JOINS ARGONAUTS

Toronto, Aug. 7—(CP)—The Dominion rugby champions, Toronto Argonauts, apparently can't lay claim to the title of the only All-Canadian team in the east-ern big four loop this coming season.

Coach Teddy Morris, who said stoutly last year that "you don't need Yanks to win," was caught off-guard when the appearance at the Argo practice last night of 206-pound Bob Myers of Chicago, former Michigan university star, back for the Argos, Myers, a six-foot one inch 23-year-old husky, is a cousin of Bob Masotti, former Hamilton Wildcat who will be at quarterback for the Argos this year.

Morris claimed that Myers' arrival and the start of the Argo football practices were purely coincidental. He said Myers was visiting his cousin here for the holidays and just came out to the field for the exercise. Reported however, believed that Myers had not only lined up with the team but had already landed a steady backfield job.

CHAPTER 12.

"Don't worry," he said. "It's just a rotten break. I'm here now, we weren't going to get away for a few weeks anyway, it'll all be over by then, you'll see it through."

"Oh, but Monty, to have it come out—to have everyone know that I was alone up there with Lin Devereaux! It isn't fair to you."

"I don't see that it makes much difference, as long as you and I understand."

"I can hear everyone in town talking," she whispered, with a cautious glance about, as if the solid walls could hear. "The women will be sneering. So the others were going to follow them up—was that it? Only they didn't. She got off pretty easy! It'll kill your mother."

"I wouldn't let it worry me, now. Nothing at all may come of it."

"But if someday you began to wonder about it, Monty. Wonder if I've told you everything?"

"I think I know everything. You weren't planning anything. But the current stuff have carried you anywhere; is that it?"

"I suppose so," she said slowly. "If several things hadn't happened. Hicabis offers unfeeling dispassionate—I don't know what to call it!—talk on the way up. That lazy way of saying that love affairs didn't pay was like a shower of cold water. Then finding out that Fairleigh and Norman, after they'd been so madly in love, after all Paris had been talking about how famous he was and how beautiful she was, and how they loved each other—were divorced! And to find out that that was all over and they were going to marry other people, like all the others—who'd never had that sort of an affair."

"Not all the others," Monty put in, as she paused.

"No, not all. But somehow, all that chilled me, and made me feel how stupid it was for me to be going up into the mountains with this man I hardly knew, and I went so flat. And then suddenly it was terrible, it was dreadful to think of Fairleigh and Norman wouldn't make it, and I'm in the rotten position of being alone there with him. It was horrible."

"But you don't—think I'm surprised," Monty began, after a moment's silence, "that a woman as beautiful as you left in an old house like this—with only an old woman and a child for company, attracted some man, and was attracted by him!"

"But I never want!" she protested, her eyes wide and her cheeks scarlet. "Never—until just now."

"And how deep is it going to go with you, Chris?"

"It's over, over, over, over, over!" Christy said feverishly. And immediately she added on a wail, "Oh, if it only was!"

"As—far as you and I are concerned, it's over," Monty said. "People are made that way, Chris. No matter how real and deep and enduring married love is, in these long separations these sudden things will flare up, and there's no shaking them off—they must have their hour. War is a dreadful night, my dear, and all sorts of shadows and creations go on in it."

"A dreadful night," she echoed. And then suddenly, "Monty, if Lin had been another sort of lover——I mean, less calculating and detached, and—and superficial, less theorizing and—and all that, then I wonder if I would have gone further?"

"That," said Monty, "is a question we need not answer now."

She leaned toward him and kissed him.

"Remember when I was in Vienna, boarding at the Gulstads?" he said.

"Of course I do. Gentle old Mrs. Gulstad, and Louison, who banged the pots and pans about and cursed the Germans and the Americans. And the little boy, Jules. The boy I sent to my plane."

"Yes, Mere Gulstard and Louison were both widowed. Louison was a square-built youngish woman with hard cheeks and black hair. She detested me at first; they were six of the tenderhearted there, and they all teased her. But I gave Jules a wide berth."

"Why on earth should she detest you?" Christy's anxious tired look had changed to one of alert interest. She was smiling.

"Perhaps because I never took the faintest interest in her. It was after the other fellows had left, and I was staying on there for a few weeks alone, that I really saw her for the first time."

"Oh," the Christy eyes was dawning comprehension.

"Then she asked me to help her with the goats; one Sunday we mended fences, and she talked of her own; they were six of them, husband—all killed in the big wars. I saw that she might have been, different—softer, once. I told her of you and the baby, of course; I'd read her parts of your letters."

Christy had turned now; his eyes and Christy's met squarely in the golden glow of the big room.

"Did she feel badly when you came away?" Christy said, clearing her throat after a long silence.

She didn't show it. She said, 'There have been others, M'sieu. There will be others. There will never be anyone like Jacques'."

"Thank you, Monty," she said, not looking at him.

"There are things more dangerous in wars than bullets," Monty said, after a moment.

"Yes."

"But we're straight?"

"We're straight."

"Out of a whole world full of distracted and demoralized people, we're together."

"Forever," she said. "But oh, Monty," Christy added suddenly remembering, "I'm not out of the woods yet. There's this horrible thing hanging over me. We don't know what that will mean!"

"But I'm here, Chris. I'll see McAuley with you, tomorrow. Who's going to start a lot of gossip going if I'm here, right behind you?"

Christy turned to link her arms about his neck.

"I love you," she said. "I'm not afraid any more." Her head came back. "Listen! she said.

"Yep. It's the telephone. I'll get it."

"But Monty, at this hour!"

"It's only half-past nine."

"It's McAuley. It's for me," Christy whispered pallng.

"I'll call you if they want you. But it's not for me."

Monty was gone, and Christy stood there with her heart beating hard and fast and her throat thick. She did not like Monty's tone behind her, and started when he put his arm about her waist.

"That was McAuley," he said. "No, don't be scared. It's all—well, I suppose you could call it good news. It's better news than we could have hoped. He said, 'I have two messages for the Misuu, Monty. One is that Mlle confessed. The other is that he just killed himself, in his cell. Tell her the case is closed. Say—and welcome home!'"

Christy was crying, and clinging to him as everything went dark. Then she was on the couch, and Monty was kneeling beside her.

"Just lie still," Monty said, "and don't pull that sort of thing on me. Lie still. It's all over. I'm home, it's all over."

She stroked his big hand, smiling at him, then on her face. But she could not speak.

"In a few minutes," he said, "w... ...omorrow. We'll go downstairs and make some turkey sandwiches and coffee, as we used to do, in the kitchen at home. Don't try to talk, dear. That is it!

For she was trying to talk, though her voice was only a whisper.

"Welcome home," Monty, her lips said, against his kiss.

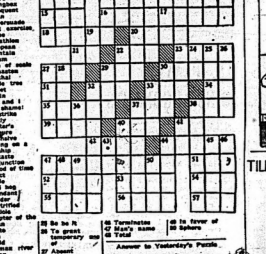
After Many Years Suffering He Tells of Grand Relief

Praises Syntona for Relief of Indigestion, Gas, Sourness and Excess Acidity. Is Now Free of Rheumatic Pain and Throbbing Headaches. "Feel Much Better" He Says.

"Anything that will help a person the way Syntona helped me deserves the highest praise you can give to it," said Mr. W. S. Barnard, well-known Canadian National Railways engineer, who resides at 129 Eass Road, Barrie, Ontario, in a recent interview.

"Indigestion worried me for many years and I took so many different things without getting relief. I seemed worth trying any more," said Mr. Barnard, "when my wife said she would get a heavy, dark-coloured bottle of Syntona. I'll never forget the gassy cramps and sour, acid stomach I had before I started and sour liquids came up into my throat. I was afraid to eat or choose my food and many days I suffered splitting headaches that diverted all the time and couldn't get my mind on my work. Often these headaches and rheumatic pains in my limbs and muscles in my back was lame and sore.

"I had been disappointed with so many things that I never expected to get relief from Syntona. I found, however, very quickly that it really began taking it. Why, almost from the first dose I noticed that I began to better and by the time I had finished the bottle I wasn't long before I felt like a new man. I have no more trouble with gas, sourness or indigestion, my appetite is fine, I sleep soundly, all those aches and pains have gone out of my limbs, back and head and I sleep well at night. I feel much better all round. In fact I don't get tired as easily as I did before.



"It is certainly great to feel so well once more and I am glad to recommend this medicine to any one suffering as I did."

Syntona is now available and can profit in a similar way by taking the advice of Mr. Barnard, - Syntona acts on the stomach, kidneys, liver and bowels, improving their action. It aids in the elimination of excess acids and impurities from the system and promotes better assimilation of food for increased strength and energy.

Syntona is sold and recommended in Carleton Place at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST.

Summer Vacationing Can Be Fun--If One Stays Home

It is almost time that people vacationed. That vacationing is the summertime is the world's worst kept secret. If you are one of the lucky persons in the know you can stop reading right now. For only those travelling by the souls of the poor nomads, but it places an added burden on the recipients of the begrimed visitors. To illustrate the point under observation let us consider the celebrated case of "A" and "B". "A" does the travelling and "B" does the receiving.

"A" thinks that through the levers of chance and by pure luck he has a vacation coming up in two weeks. He begins to plan on a fishing trip to Fort Churchill where the temperature is in the middle sixties and the topic of conversation is the blubber market — no more U. N. worries for him. He is mildly rebuked by his wife for such anti-social attitudes and is given to understand that if they do not go to visit cousin Mathilda (the deaf cousin) she won't be responsible for any money to Reno. Accepting this mild reproof with the manly good grace as he can muster "A" negotiates a compromise.

Happy Day

The happy day arrives when the vacation begins and "A" and his wife leave to visit cousin Mathilda. (Cousin Mathilda is notified of their impending visit by a wire three hours before the party sets out. This forestalls any attempt on the part of cousin Mathilda to tell them that she planned to visit them instead.)

The long traffic jam on the way out of the city gets "A" into an ideal mood for the four-hundred-mile drive to "B". After an hour and a half the going gets easier and "A" steps up the speed to thirty miles an hour and has a flat. Some idiotic car

A flat. Some idiotic car in one of the numerous intersections that pass for garages informs "A" (after a two-mile walk) that he is working for the summer and has not learned how to change a tire yet. This makes for friendly relations with the motor car industry and the garage operators and the oil drillers and the iron miners that can be blamed car possible.

At this point Henry Ford and the Dodge Brothers are lucky to be away from it all.

Lots of Dust

Highways in the process of being paved, on which the dust rises in enveloping clouds, leave the traveller with a distinctly "dirty" taste in his mouth and an abhorrence of all the vile fiends who pave highways. (The wash job on the car is shot by now.)

Then to add to the joys of travelling are those reckless persons who drive as if possessed. They dodge on and off bumpers all afternoon and evening and then wind up two miles ahead of you in another traffic jam.

Self-preservation is the first law of nature, thinks A after a long ride on a cup of coffee. So the party hails its delightful journey-side stand a snack at one of the numerous wayside eating resorts. With old sawdust that is called pie, and boiling paint remover disguised as coffee under the bell A resolves to starve rather than touch anything like it again. After all self preservation, and the law of nature call.

Appetising Picture

Well, the voyageurs arrive filthy, tired, nerves on edge and famished, at cousin Mathilda's. They look in wonder at the spotless house, the cool appearance of everything but cousin Mathilda, who the peace and order of a gunfleet home. They gaze in awe at the roast beef, mashed potatoes, ice cream etc, that is served them (hours after the scheduled time of arrival) and think of the pickle sandwiches and warm soda pop which has sufficed to keep body and soul together for the better part of their day. This is too much for their befogged minds and they succumb to mute admiration.

What they don't know is that cousin Mathilda has had the plumbers, painters, decorators, gardiners, cooks, and maids working like galley slaves since the first news of the trip leaked out. Besides becoming almost hopelessly in debt to the butcher and the greengrocer she has had to pay the doctor twelve dollars for "something to soothe the nerves."

Like Red Flag

It does not help her enfeebled condition any to hear the ravenous guests toss off romantic names like Niagara Falls, the Grand Canyon, Yosemite Park, and the Bar Harbor Pavilion, as if they were on speaking terms with the management. (Mentioning big names like this always serves to illustrate the cosmopolitan make-up of the traveller and the strange, provincial composition of the host.)

Then the following morning, after the guests have slept in a feather bed for the first time in years, to be told that the boulders in Yellowstone have a soothing effect on the nerves, cousin Mathilda can hardly restrain the urge to kill or travel. Then comes a round of entertaining and staying up until 2.00 or 3.00 a.m. every morning for a week. None of the parties involved are accustomed to staying up after 11.00 p.m. on normal occasions — but this is living in a half-hearted way.

Then the time comes for the eventual departure. A leaves the comfortable atmosphere of the ever-busy Mathilda with reluctance. The good food, the leisurely breakfasts, the long parties are left behind, with a sigh. (As for that horrible ride home, well.)

Free Again

Cousin Mathilda sees them go and sighs. Now she can go back to regular, living, and cold cuts. The silver returns to its tarnish, and the dishes can pile up in the sink until Saturday night. Those beautiful long drives are appealing, though.

A return to work and gets back to normal after ten days or so of black coffee, early retiring, and late rising. Thank Providence that the holidays are over — he groans as the phone rings. Who can that be?

Roll it can't be. "Dear," he calls to his wife, "can we get the plumbers, painters and decorators in at once, cousin Mathilda is coming for a week."

'U.K. Not Going to Break Any Contracts'--Strachey

By STUART UNDERHILL
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 8 (CP) — The United Kingdom already has stopped buying foods not covered by contract in hard currency areas embracing Canada and the United States, Food Minister John Strachey said today as it began conference, but he added: "We are not going to break any contracts."

Asked if the government intended to reduce purchases under existing contracts which provide that Britain "shall buy" up to a certain amount, the Minister grinned and said:

"I would remind you that under these agreements there have been some shortfalls on our Canadian supplies."

Strachey went on to pay tribute to Canada for completing delivery of 180,000,000 bushels of wheat in the first year of the Anglo-Canadian wheat contract under which the Dominion had undertaken to supply 600,000,000 bushels during a four-year period.

He said he had cabled Trade Minister MacKinnon expressing the British government's "sincere gratitude for the way in which your government has gone ported us during this difficult year."

"Frightful winter difficulties—blizzards which immobilized rail traffic—meant that Canadian farmers had a terrible time keeping wheat moving," he said. "However, they did a marvellous job in bunching deliveries through Montreal once the St. Lawrence River was open."

He was unable to say how British aid diet would be affected by government's announced intention of reducing food imports from hard currency (dollar) areas by $12,000,000 ($40,000,000) monthly as this depended upon what foodstuffs and commodity countries were able to provide and how long the dollar crisis lasted.

Horrified Crowds See Girl Teeter On Window Sill

Hamilton, Aug. 8 (CP) — Horrified crowds bound for stores and offices in the downtown section of Hamilton were treated to the streets early today when a young girl appeared on a window, saying she didn't want to live any longer, teetered precariously on the sill of a fifth floor window in the Royal Connaught Hotel.

Someone shouted from the street to hold her attention and Nicholas Delaney, 18, Lawrence Street, her home, behind, pulled her struggling back into the building.

Nicholas Delaney, one of the heroes of the incident, said the girl was not a guest in the hotel. He said she entered the building and reached the 11th floor where she tried doors and windows in an apparent suicide quest.

After she had been drawn back by the house detectives the girl struggled free, raced to the window ledge and was almost going to the sill when the detectives drew her back a second time.

The veteran rapids-shooting liner, which appear to be dwarfed by the mishap, although officials and crew members declined to discuss the accident. The Rapids Prince was aided in working herself free from the mud-bottom by the salvage tug Salvage Prince and the Salvage Queen of Kingston.

Reports reaching here indicated that the liner ran aground Wednesday night with a broken rudder chain. After being freed she ran down the river to the Iroquois lock and Morrisburg canal and then started her western trip again.

At Montreal, company officials said the liner probably would be back on regular service out of Prescott, Ont., on Sunday.

ODOM TAKES OFF FOR INDIA AFTER HOPPING OCEAN

Attempting to Break Globe-Circling Solo Flight Record Set Up By Post in 1933

Cairo, Aug. 8 —(AP)— Pilot William P. Odom, one third of the way along on his flight to set a new solo record flight around the world, left Cairo today at 6:38 a.m. (12:38 a.m., EDT) for Karachi, India.

Paris, Aug. 8 (AP)—William P. Odom took off from Orly Field here for Karachi at 10:39 a.m. (4:39 a.m., EDT) today on the third leg of his effort to break Wiley Post's globe-circling solo flight record.

Odom arrived in Paris one hour and 31 minutes for rest and brie, refuelling before his takeoff on an intended non-stop flight to the Indian city. He expected to reach Karachi in 12 hours.

At take off time, he had been in route 11 hours and 47 minutes. He left Chicago at 1:33 p.m. EDT, yesterday and stopped briefly to take on 1,200 gallons of gasoline at Gander, Nfld., on Thursday morning at 9:26 a.m. (4:26 a.m. EDT).

Odom said the Trans-Atlantic flight was "wonderful." He added that he had to climb to 25,000 feet to get above the storm clouds. He said he had averaged about 220 miles an hour.

While field attendants were refuelling his plane, Odom underwent the intensive checkup to determine whether he was suffering from exhaustion. He said he "felt good," and that he had not been tired during the flight.

His food supplies for the flight from Karachi consisted of weak tea with sugar, cold turkey, whole wheat bread and fresh oranges.

Odom took off from Gander on his Trans-Atlantic flight at 9:11 a.m. EDT last night, after a 3-hour, 18-minute flight from Chicago. He made the complete hop flight out of the world within 90 to 94 hours. The time was 116 hours.

The 27-year-old former R.A.F. ferry command officer established a world record for round-the-globe record of 78 hours and 55 1-2 minutes in the same plane last April.

The Miss Peterborough beauty crown was awarded to Miss Theresa Goselin (left) last night after four days of confusion. Mrs. Paul Meiklejohn (right) was awarded cup for Miss Peterborough and District.

Beauty Title Transferred From War Bride to Unmarried Rival But Bride Gets Title Too

Peterborough, Aug. 8 — (CP)— The crown of "Miss Peterborough" was transferred today from the blonde tresses of 23-year-old Mrs. Joyce Meiklejohn to the brunette hair-do of 19-year-old Miss Theresa Goselin.

But the judges appointed by the Canadian Legion, which sponsored the contest last Monday, gave a new crown to the deposed title-holder. Mrs. Meiklejohn is officially "Miss Peterborough and District."

The original winner of the beauty contest on a complicated ballot system which was later questioned, Mrs. Meiklejohn is a British war bride from Newcastle-on-Tyne, mother of two children.

She shed tears for a time after the judges in session at the Legion headquarters made their findings, but the tears were mainly caused by her reaction to rumors that the contest had been rigged when she had worn a girdle under her bathing suit.

The girdle question was soon cleared up. Miss Goselin denied that she had ever made such a charge. After the rulings last night Mrs. Meiklejohn shook hands with Miss Goselin.

Just a Swell Girl

"I was told that Theresa had said things like that," Mrs. Meiklejohn said. Her pink dabbed her cheeks. "I am assured that she did not say so. I was glad that Theresa received the prizes. She is a swell girl."

Miss Goselin promptly joined in: "I would like everyone to know that Joyce has been most unfair. She is a perfect lady."

Both girls got a title and both got prizes. The committee said it was giving the prizes to "Miss Peterborough," to "Miss Peterborough and District," and to "Miss Tourist," a third contestant.

Four of the five original contestant judges sat 1-2 the session. Hugh Campbell, Vern Dawson, Dr. J. M. Vellend and Dr. Robert Bell. Absent was Herb Jamieson. Three first assumption was that reporters would have to remove themselves. Then they elected Wilfred Hurpke, city solicitor, who was representing Mrs. Meiklejohn. But the elected persons were allowed back in after an hour.

Receive Cups and Prizes

Then Paddy Burke, president of the Canadian Legion branch, announced that the committee had reverted to its original plan. He explained that Mrs. Meiklejohn would receive a cup, a cash prize of $100 and other donated prizes. This completed a year's reign for her. "Then why is Mrs. Meiklejohn crying?"

Burke replied: "We are not here to answer questions such as that; only to give a statement to you."

Before her tears had all dried Mrs. Meiklejohn said that she had been "disgraced" by the contest and "terrible cattle. I've proven that I did not wear one." She said she was worried about the fact that I am suspected of the ungentlemanlike."

But in a few minutes she was shaking hands with Miss Goselin as the Peterborough beauty contest was a matter of history.

$100,000 DAMAGE BY SEVERE STORM IN TIMAGAMI AREA

High Wind and Hail Small Cottages, Boats And Damage 2 Small Commercial Planes

Timagami, Aug. 8 — (CP) — Striking this Northern Ontario resort centre with the violence of a hurricane, an electrical storm accompanied by driving hail and a 70-mile-per-hour wind, yesterday caused upwards of $100,000 damage in less than two hours. No casualties were reported.

Two commercial aircraft, homes, windows, chimneys, uprooted trees and telephone poles were shattered as the tricky storm struck the town shortly after the noon hour, then moved on to the southwest with incredible speed.

The city fire brigade put out late in the morning, suddenly the clouds appeared and following a brief period of rain, the Heavens literally burst open. Hail stones as large as golf balls were driven by a terrific wind nearly blotted out the sun. The storm was over in an hour.

As quickly as the storm struck, it abated, to return about 2 o'clock with similar intensity. The storm subsided about only 10 minutes, subsiding to intermittent showers throughout the afternoon.

Aircraft Demolished

The commercial aircraft were almost demolished as they rode at their moorings at the Lumsden Lake. One owned by George Prince, Timagami businessman, sidered a total loss. The other, owned by Alf Watts, Temagami lumberjack, was not as severely damaged.

At the height of the storm, Theriault dashed out to his craft in an attempt to hold it on the water by himself. The fierce gale picked the plane up like a kite, threw it over the dock and onto the shore.

The town store, house and another small building at the Onaping Mine, Canadian Copper Co. property in the Village were torn from their bases and carried through the air more than 100 feet. Much of the camp were torn and shifted under the force of the gale.

A brick chimney on the Roncoe Hotel was blown down. Trees were winds along with window glass and shingles. Another hotel, Goodards, reported that the running roof after water poured through its ceiling. Power lines were blown through the floors, saturating furniture with oil.

Had to Reach Boat

Fishing co—Lake Timagami when the storm broke, Victor Goselin of Fillsonburg, Ont., and Harry Sinden of Toronto, had difficult time beaching their boat.

Goselin said: "Everything blew, we had not time to escape," Goselin said. "We were in the midst of the storm. "Our boat was only about 50 feet from the dock when it struck but the rain and hail blotted out the land completely.

"We had to continue beaching, a bolt of lightning struck one of the trees about 10 feet from us. It came through my whole body. I'll not forget this vacation for a long time."

Fred Doty of the forestry town, near the lake shore, Johnny "Caribou" McMurin was showered with fiery glare as the windows burst under the fierce impact, and the steel power shook like a reed.

"I didn't know whether to jump from the boat or dive into the bucking bronco—I stuck," he said later.

Turned Into Lake

Among the buildings damaged was the store of Mr. and Mrs. Roger Millette. They were sitting down to dinner. The storm rent windows inwards, narrowly missing the occupied seats as it came pouring through drenched their household goods. Mud covered the interior of the building into a veritable lake.

Mrs. Millette in her tent, Mrs. J. Clatworthy of Timmins narrowly escaped death when a huge pine tree crashed onto the canvas roof. Badly shaken up but otherwise uninjured the woman was rescued by her husband and other campers.

The verandah roof of a large building was torn from its supports, and smashed to the ground some distance away.

3 KILLED, 20 HURT, CAR TELESCOPES MOTOR COACH

Auto Hurtles 175 Feet Into Bus After Sideswiping Another Near Cincinnati

Cincinnati, Aug. 8. (AP)— Hamilton County police reported that three young Ohio residents were killed and 20 persons injured early today when an automobile telescoped a Portsmouth-bound Greyhound Lines motor coach in suburban Mount Washington.

Police said the auto hurtled 175 feet into the bus after first sideswiping another motor coach. The three dead men were riding in the auto.

The auto impaled the second bus with such force, police reported, that 14 of the injured bus passengers had to be removed via the emergency exit.

Police identified the dead as Kenneth Jordan, 20, the driver; Norman Jarvis, 21, both of Wilkamburg, O., and Sidney E. Brown, 20, of Cincinnati.

Two of the injured were in critical condition.

Too Many MacDonalds Yugoslav Girl

Veteran Found in Search for Flier

By DANIEL DE LUCE

Belgrade — (AP) — The little, dark-haired woman at a government desk in Belgrade today was searching through words with a stiffe four years ago.

She is daintily manicured and efficient. Her dress is chic. Yet she has not forgotten when she slept in the open under a tarpaulin, retreat, ate green clover when food ran out, and swore vengeance against an enemy that would have hanged her.

She was just one of her medals for valor. But there is six-American army watch on her slender wrist. It belonged to an airman whose life she helped to save when he bailed out of a crippled bomber in the mountains behind the Germans lines.

Munira Karakasanovic, 32-year-old ex-partisan, has helped made the conversion from war to peace.

Like thousands of other women from the ranks of Tito's army, Munira has found an official position in Yugoslavia's "new democracy." She is a member of the Belgrade city office, dealing mainly with foreigners, and she recommended McDonald, who was a flier, they just smiled and said, "Oh, there are hundreds and thousands of McDonalds."

Only 36 of Scharnhorst's 900 Men Survived Sinking of Nazi Warship

London, Aug. 8 —(AP)— Only 36 German sailors of her complement of 900 officers and men survived the sinking of the Scharnhorst, Adolf Hitler's last seaworthy battleship, off the North Cape of Norway, Dec. 26, 1943, an Admiralty report disclosed today.

The report, signed by Admiral Sir Bruce Fraser, commander-in-chief of Britain's home fleet at the time, describes the death of the Scharnhorst by units of the home fleet at the German war vessel sought to attack a convoy en route to Murmansk.

The convoy fleet, headed by the battleship Duke of York, spotted the Scharnhorst by radar in the Arctic night, shadowed her all day until she came within gun range and finally sank her about 7:45 p.m.

"No officers survived, the most senior of the prisoners being of the lieutenant rating of acting petty officers."

From the first radar contact, the engagement was a vast game of hide and seek, with the Duke of York and her accompanying cruisers and destroyers hunting the German ship by radar.

The Scharnhorst was finally sent to the bottom by a destroyer's torpedo.

The report described the battle's last scene in the darkness:

"All that could be seen of the Scharnhorst was a dull glow through a dense cloud of smoke, which the star shells and searchlights of the surrounding ships could not penetrate.

"No ship, therefore, saw the enemy sink, but it seems fairly certain that at about 7:45 p.m. after a heavy underwater explosion which was heard and felt in several ships a short distance away.

Churchill Charges Labor Asking For Totalitarian Govt.

Claims Economic Crisis Used as 'Flimsy Pretext'

London, Aug. 8 (AP)— Britain's Socialist-dominated House of Commons approved today the government's request for "crisis powers" bill, described by Winston Churchill as "a blank cheque for totalitarian government."

Churchill's amendment to reject the government's emergency bill was defeated by 231 votes to 148.

The House then gave the bill a second reading—approving it in principle—without a record vote. The government hoped to push the measure through all required parliamentary stages before the Commons' scheduled adjournment next Wednesday.

Can Direct Workers

The bill, government maintained the bill is necessary for effective dealing with the British economic crisis. It would empower the government to tell men and women where they must work and to take over the management of firms considered to be operating inefficiently.

Home Secretary Ede, backing the bill, said "we are agreed that the is a crisis likely to move forward with such rapidity that we cannot be sure how we can deal drastically and swiftly with awkward situations that may arise."

Churchill snapped:

"Flimsy old bill!"

Amid cheers from opposition benches, the country's wartime Prime Minister declared: "Not only governments have rights; ordinary British people have rights, too, and we are asked to give a blank cheque for totalitarian government."

Defends Program

Churchill, angry and shouting, launched his bitter attack on the government after Stafford Cripps, Labor President of the Board of Trade, told the House: "We are not going to be cross-examined in advance as to exactly what we will do with the powers when we get them." Herbert Lord Pearl, Tory of the Council in the Cabinet, defended the powers sought under the bill as necessary for emergency economic program and said they were not a departure plot to conduct a social revolution."

Orders made under the bill would be open to parliamentary challenge, Pearl pointed out.

But Churchill hammered vigorously at the government in his speech rejecting the bill.

City and District News

CLAIMED CYCLISTS NOT USING LIGHTS

Motorists in Belleville have been punished more or less all last summer because of the alleged blame based on city streets at night. It is alleged by motorists that in various parts of the city cyclists are riding without lights, riding around by night with no lights affixed to their cycles. This makes it exceedingly difficult for motorists to see such riders.

The worst difficulty I find," one driver stated today, "is dodging on Bleecker avenue around the dark streets and riding with reckless abandon. If a street some child is going to be seriously injured as the result of such practice," stated another motorist in warning today.

It is possible for police to patrol all streets simultaneously, but a little more caution on the part of cyclists might avert a serious accident.

NO CASES OF POLIO REPORTED IN CITY

No cases of poliomyelitis have been reported in Belleville thus far, hospital authorities have said today.

Three cases of the dread disease have occurred in Kingston and district. All cases are described as "slight" by physicians and complete recovery is hoped for, doctors in charge of the cases say.

TRAFFIC INCREASES OVER IVY LEA BRIDGE

Traffic tolls over the Ivy Lea (1000 Islands) bridge amounted to $74,110.78 during the month of July. It was recently officially announced. This is an increase of 23% over the corresponding month of 1926 when a total of $60,034.33 was collected. It is now anticipated that the tolls for the year 1927 will amount to over $250,000, according to consulting engineers.

MARSHES AND CITY DUMP SPRAYED AS SAFETY MEASURE

As a measure to cut down the fly menace through which polio germs might be spread and to destroy mosquitoes, the city dump and marshes adjacent to the Moira river were sprayed with a mixture of D.D.T. and kerosene, it is learned today. Done by George Whitman, sanitary inspector for the local Board of Health.

Spraying of the area was completed last night, it was announced by officials of the health board to acquire sufficient quantities of D.D.T. is slowing up the planned spraying program, it was stated. Plans were to spray all marshes in the county surrounding the cities might breed, but thus far quantities of spray sufficient only to spray the dump and adjacent marshes have been secured.

COUNTERFEIT U. S. CURRENCY REPORTED

Counterfeit United States currency, some of the cleverest that has been reported circulated throughout the North American continent in a number of years, the Post Office Weekly Bulletin: The denominations are the $20 note and one hundred dollar notes. The bogus two-hundred dollar note is described as being a Federal Reserve note of Philadelphia issue, bears the letter "A," facsimile number 9, backplate number 1147 and carries the 1924A. The twenty-dollar counterfeit notes are also Federal Reserve notes with a green Treasury seal and the insignia of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco and the series 1934A. The one hundred dollar counterfeit note is of poor workmanship and should be easily distinguished, the report stated. Here the suffix letter are noticeably thicker than the numerals that follow.

42-POUND MUSKIE CAUGHT IN THE ST. LAWRENCE

—Ted Mabee, Gananoque, hooked a forty-two pound muskie on a shoal called Forty Acres, in the St. Lawrence River. It took him 70 minutes to land the beauty.

This is the second large muskie to be caught there within the past few weeks. Art Hargreaves, an American visitor, fought two hours to land a twenty-five pounder. He was using a light bamboo pole and a fifteen-pound test line at the time.

Accumulative Sick Leave Plan Adopted by Education Board

Sought by members of the local public schools and collegiate boards starting for the past two years by an accumulative sick leave plan has been adopted by the Belleville Board of Education for all permanent employees of more than where they are provided for under workmen's compensation.

Decision of the board members was that the plan will go into effect at the commencement of the fall school term in September, or on any such date as any employee shall attain permanent status.

Provisions of the plan adopted permit an allowance of 20 sick leave days as sick leave for any one year for all employees eligible to benefit and the accumulated cost to the unused portion of this allowance for the previous six years in the employ of the board will be placed in the accumulative sick leave to the credit of each employee as plan.

an accumulated reserve. Therefore after this accumulating period will not extend beyond the previous consecutive years. The total accumulation may not exceed 60 days plus the 20 days' allowance for the current year.

Up to three days may be allowed for death in the immediate family of a teacher, or for other reasons acceptable to the finance committee, and apply on the 20 days' sick leave or on the accumulated sick leave.

The finance committee of the board will have the power to consider and act upon any case submitted for its consideration and its decisions will be final. The board of education may at any time on recommendation from the finance committee amend the intent or the operation of any rule governing sick leave.

Gaming House Charge is Laid By OPP Officers

Charged with keeping a gaming house, two men with the Queen City Shows currently playing at the Belleville fair grounds appeared in city police court this morning after charges had been laid by specials delegated officers of the Ontario Provincial Police.

The two officers had made the rounds of the Queen City Shows during Thursday evening and after playing two of the concessions for some time, revealed their identity and placed the operators under arrest. Equipment of the concessions was confiscated by the officers.

After evidence was taken from the two investigating officers, Magistrate T. Y. Wills wanted to know if the appearance of Queen City Shows in the city was sponsored by any charitable organization or other body. This was not answered to the satisfaction of the court and proceedings were enlarged until August 19th.

Robt. A. Pringle, local solicitor, appeared for the two accused men, Maxwell Goldie and Joseph Koenig.

Finds Guilty to Theft

Robert Ross, aged 55, Ontario chimney sweep also appeared in court charged with the theft of some $40 in cash, the property of Martin Funeral Home. The accused pleaded guilty to the theft of one bag but claimed he knew nothing of the other three. He had been arrested by local police after he had "pawned" one of the suit cases at a local service station.

"I plead guilty to the theft of one bag but I know nothing of the others," stated the accused.

Hastings County Restricted Area For TB Cattle

Proposed by many county livestock breeders for several years and in the talk stage for well over a decade, Hastings County has now been made restricted area for the eradication of tuberculosis in cattle it has been announced by local officials of the Health of Animals branch.

With the announcement the county becomes immediately a restricted area with the first general test anticipated to commence as of August 9th.

In charge of the test will be Dr. E. N. Harrop, assistant to Dr. Youngbusband, veterinary inspector for the Bay of Quinte district. Dr. Harrop will be later assisted by other veterinarians who are now engaged with a re-test of cattle in district restricted area.

In some instances restricted areas for the eradication of tuberculosis in cattle are bounded by natural divisions such as rivers, canals and lakes, but the Hastings area will be bounded by the county boundaries.

No estimate was made by Dr. Harrop as to the length of time that it would take to make the first general test in Hastings.

"You have not been very cooperative with the officers in trying to recover the articles," returned the magistrate. "You must have been awfully drunk if you remember nothing about them."

"I was pretty drunk," the accused admitted.

Failing return of the accused's finger print record the case was laid over until the 12th. Ross was also charged with intoxication.

Purse Was Found Just Where It Had Been Left

Under the pillow is not always the safest place to leave a purse. Just this was discovered the other night by a Michigan tourist who spent a few anxious hours before the purse was returned to him.

The American tourist and his wife were camping for the night at a tourist cabin at Marysville and during the night the wife had become uneasy and placed both her husband's and her own purse under the pillow.

In the morning the husband had taken the purse from the pillow and had pocketed his own and left his wife's under the sheets. The couple had then continued on their journey leaving the wife's purse, containing some $30, behind.

Several hours and some 100 miles later they remembered and a hasty call was put in to Provincial Police here. A check by officers uncovered the purse — exactly where it had been left.

Radiant-Heating Appears Threat To Old System

Ottawa, Aug. 8 (CP) — The reign of the radiator, long a familiar and unassailable figure in many Canadian households, appeared today to be under incipient siege.

The National Research Council, the Dominion's scientific headquarters, reported that it is quite possible to keep a home warm and comfortable with radiant-heating methods providing it is insulated and weather-stripped according to modern standards.

The report was based on the 1946-47 winter's work on a special project which probed the potentialities of a system in which heat is contained in floors, walls or ceilings instead of radiators.

It said tests had showed that when a room is being heated for human occupancy there is a fuel saving through the radiant method "because an unventilated radiant-heated room appears to be very, much more pleasant to live in than an unventilated radiator-heated room."

In England, where people "normally live in cool houses with open fireplaces, this means that the windows be open far less than in the radiator-heated room and the saving in fuel could quite easily amount to 30 per cent."

"This was accidentally verified by an NRC official who moved his desk from a fine modern building equipped with steam-heated radiators to one of the floor-heated test rooms with darkened windows and no ventilation."

The Council said the fear that floors would have to be overheated and thus be uncomfortable to the feet was "unjustified because in severe weather higher temperatures can be permitted."

Its scientists erected two special houses for their tests, but found time to probe floor-heating only last winter. Test work on ceiling heating will come later.

To date, it has shown that whatever heat is supplied to a radiant-heated room can "be satisfactorily accounted for as heat loss through walls, windows or ceiling or as heat required to warm the air coming in from outside...therefore if one were dealing with inanimate objects radiant-heating would appear to save no fuel, except for the fact that lower temperatures are permissible in the room."

Just how much saving in fuel might be obtained through panel-heating is a problem that has been studied by engineers in the United States, the council said. It has been claimed that this new-type heating can save up to as muth as 30 per cent of present-day fuel bills.

Presence of Mind Shown by Youth After Explosion

Orillia, Aug. 8 — (CP)—While his father watched from a door 100 yards away, eight-year-old Timmy Weinland of New York last night showed presence of mind in saving his own life after he had been hurled four feet by an explosion aboard a motor boat on Lake Couchiching.

Nearly blinded by smoke, his clothes and hair aflame, the young lad was in the stern of the 23-foot vessel when the explosion occurred. He picked himself up from the deck, grabbed a life preserver and threw himself into the water. Two girls in a canoe picked him up.

Doctors who treated the lad said his action undoubtedly saved his life. They added that if the fire had seared his flesh for another few seconds, the boy would have been fatally burned.

Only other person aboard the vessel, Ted Gaudeur, a guide, was in the bow of the boat when the explosion took place and was unhurt. He stayed aboard the craft until fire extinguishers were brought from shore.

Timmy's grandfather, T. L. Pogue of (1733 McMillan St.) Cincinnati, O., who owns the boat said that he, the boy, Mr. Weinland and Gauduer had taken the craft to be repaired. When the repairs were completed and the boat tested, Timmy and the guide were going to return to their cabin by water, while Mr. Pogue and the boy's father were going by land.

When the boat was 100 yards off shore, Weinland saw the explosion and his son thrown to the deck enveloped in flames.

Cause of the explosion was unknown.

Board Discusses Question Income Taxes of Factories

A little discussion in regard to income taxes for cheese factories took up the business portion of the meeting of the Belleville Cheese Board last evening. The different status of a co-operative factory and a joint stock company in regard to the levelling of income taxes was pointed out by various factory representatives.

Further discussion on this subject was postponed until a later date when more comprehensive information would be available.

Business was brisk and the cheeses were sold in short order. There were 3,014 white, and 980 colored cheese offered for sale. The colored cheese sold at the initial bid of 25½ cents a pound with the distribution being equal amongst the buyers. The white cheese sold at the initial bid of 24 7/8 cents a pound. In addition to the amounts listed there were 710 small cheese.

The factories represented and the amounts of cheese offered for sale by each are listed as follows:

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 8 — (CP) — Golds improved slightly in the early session of the stock exchange today but other groups eased back as volume remained low and trading continued on a highly selective basis. Industrials and base metals softened.

The exchange's noon index listed industrials down .30 to 170.13, golds up .60 to 109.04, base metals down .29 to 82.34. Volume for the first three hours was 282,000 shares.

Mild accumulation of producers and near producers in golds saw Buffalo Ankerite up 15 at $3.20, Kerr Addison 1-8 at 15 3-8, Kirkland Lake 2 at $2.09, MacLeod 5 at $1.65, Malartic 5 at $1.70, Preston 3 at $2.03, Horzone 9 at 60, San Antonio 10 at $4.15, Upper Canada 4 at $2.24 and Wright Hargreaves 10 at $2.90. Sherritt, Steep Rock, Macdonald, Labrador and Nickel were off in the base metals.

Fractional weakness maintained throughout the industrials. Paper and liquors were down in majority, Bell Telephone and C. P. R. were off in the utilities but oils tightened on light gains by International Petroleum and Canadian oils.

CHURCHILL

"These powers are the negation of British freedom and way of living in time of peace," he declared.

"The government's proposals will mean the abrogation of parliament and of all our long-cherished rights."

Contending that the plan announced by Attlee in the House on Wednesday was universally judged to be inadequate to the crisis, Churchill asked: "Is the government trying to make up for lack of deeds by boastful words?

"Are they without a plan, trying to cover up their vacuity by assuming totalitarian powers?"

Almost immediately, however, the big Labor majority rallied behind its leadership and in a test vote, taken on a routine adjournment motion, over-rode the Attlee critics, 318 to 170.

Nevertheless, discontent was said to be brewing within the labor party and morning newspapers said 100 labor members, contending that Attlee had failed to give courageous leadership and that his plans were far from adequate, had demanded that the prime minister hear their complaints at a caucus next week.

Nineteen leaders of the party's left wing, in a letter to the party's organ, the Daily Herald, said the Attlee program "has dismayed many members of the parliamentary labor party," and the Daily Mirror, which recently called for Attlee's resignation said:

"The nation continues to lack a real plan. Still more it lacks a real leader."

Anthony Eden, No. 2 man in the opposition Conservative party whacked the plan yesterday with an attack in which he said it was "hasty improvisation, ill-considered and incomplete."

On other fronts in Britain's "economic Dunkerque:"

May Work Saturdays

The executive of the National Mineworkers Union recommended that miners, who have been on a five-day week since spring, work at least two Saturdays a month to boost coal production. The government had urged the miners to work a half hour extra every day.

Hugh Dalton, Chancellor of the Exchequer, announced that Britain's armed forces, now numbering about 1,300,000, would be cut to 870,000 by the end of 1948. Attlee's goal, announced Wednesday, was for a reduction to 1,007,000 by the end of March.

The treasury announced a new tax on foreign films amounting to 75 per cent of the earnings of the films.

The new tax, experts said, would run from $80,000 to $400,000 on a picture, depending on its popularity, while the former tax of five pence (about 10 cents) a foot amounted to about $1,000 on a movie running 100 minutes, the average length.

Would be "Masters"

He said the government ministers would be "the absolute masters" of the country while parliament was in recess. It is scheduled to adjourn for the summer next week.

"Is this necessary to the life of the country"? he asked. "It would mean a state of alarm and discouragement and paralysis."

Churchill declared that Attlee's speech Wednesday, in which the prime minister outlined his work more, eat less program for Britain, was "universally judged to be inadequate."

Carrying on in a sharp personal attack on the prime minister, Churchill inquired:

Asks Question

"Who is going to wield these powers? Not merely the prime minister who seems increasingly an amused passenger in the pleasure boat."

He declared that the government's ministers were men who were prepared always to put the party before the country.

In his speech, Attlee had called for "Dunkerque spirit" to overcome a threatened dollar famine born of fast spending and under production.

"You talk of Dunkerque spirit," Churchill said. "What would Dunkerque have been if the little boats were only going to take off members of the trade unions and it was said that we didn't care a tinker's cuss for the rest?"

This apparently was a reference to Fuel Minister Emmanuel Shinwell's speech several weeks ago in which he was reported to have said "We do not give a tinker's cuss about non-labor people in Britain."

Worse Than War

He took the floor after Deputy Prime Minister Herbert Morrison said the powers sought under Prime Minister Attlee's emergency program were "appropriate and necessary" and not "a deep dark plot to conduct a social revolution."

Swinging from an attack on the government-requested legislation to one on the government itself, the wartime Prime Minister asserted:

"The main cause of at least half our difficulties has arisen from the partisan policies and administrative incompetence" of the Attlee regime.

"Life under the Socialist government is worse, far worse, for the country than it ever was under the full blast and severity of war," Churchill continued.

"Except for bloodshed, all the evils of war—and worse—are going on in our country today. Do you deny that?" he cried.

Shouts of denial rose from the government front benches, but Churchill declared that Conservatives have no confidence in the government's ability.

He gave notice last night that he intended to enter the fray himself and that his Conservative opposition would fight to beat down the government's request for what he called "unlimited and undefined powers" for dealing with the current enconomic squeeze.

British Agriculture

Agriculture among other things is getting first place in the world's attention. Following the worst of the war years people have to get down to fundamentals and food is one of them, the primal one.

The United Kingdom Information Office at Ottawa has issued a booklet, "Agriculture," in which is told the story, in historic times to tell the story of man's rise in Britain and the development of tillage and the various branches of farming.

About their island's early days, when man in Britain first began to farm. They kept flocks and grazed them on whatever herbage was available. They then learned to plant crops by planting a pointed stick into the ground and dropping seed in the hole.

Then came the Romans teaching how to farm the fertile valleys by using plow and oxen. It remained for the Saxons, however, to establish villages from that emerged the manorial system with its three-field plan, under which the tenant held a number of strips in each of three communal fields.

This system remained until the fourteenth century when the expanding wool trade of the country brought the need for enclosing land for sheep-raising. Out of this grew the modern farming system. These fields were either owned outright by freeholders or farmed by tenants paying a money rent.

Then came the development of arable farming by such men as Tull, who improved by use of lime and by adoption of a four-course rotation of wheat, turnips, barley, clover, a system encouraged by the great landowners designed to keep the soil permanently fertile. Britain then took her place as the most successful farming country in the world.

Improvements came, inventions like Jethro Tull's corn drill in 1701, James Smith's reaper in 1815 and Patrick Bell's reaper in 1828, chaff-cutters, steam cultivators, steam plows, binders, scarifiers, followed. Also the Norfolk wheel hoe was improved. Robert Blakewell, (1725-95) changed the large-boned coarse, slow-maturing sheep into the well fleshed New Leicester which has been the sire in many of the famous sheep breeds of today. The annual sheep shearings were the forerunners of our modern agricultural shows.

In 1720 Benjamin Tomkins, was left in his farm-yard with "one cow called Silver and her calf." Their descendants were selected and improved for more than a century and became the great Hereford breed thriving splendidly in Britain and on the ranges of Texas and Australia.

A poor Yorkshire weaver, James Tuley, reared a pig that became world famous. They sent his wife deprived themselves so that their pig might have all it wanted. They washed it and took it for walks on fine days and in 1851 they surprised the world as they appeared with it at the Royal Show. This pig was the forerunner of the Large White, called the most renowned breed in the world.

Of the twenty breeds of cattle, sheep, pigs and horses, of world-wide reputation today, all but three originated in England. When the war began in 1939 Britain was the world's largest exporter of livestock.

This is a brief record of the growth of British agriculture to which the whole world owes a heavy debt.

Gipsy Smith

Gipsy Rodney Smith, 87, famed in evangelism, died last week on board the liner Queen Mary on a journey in quest of health. For full seventy years he had preached the "old-time" religion on every continent in the world. Only a year ago he preached his last sermon at the age of 86. He had been converted in a Methodist Chapel in England as a gipsy boy of sixteen. In the three score years and ten of his active service as evangelism, he spoke in every shape and size of building, in cathedrals, churches, halls, warehouses, and under canvas, and his audience was many millions and of many races. He visited North America more than thirty times and his work as a roving preacher was known everywhere.

He was a dynamic personality like that of great leaders in other spheres of human interest.

His rise to world prominence is a tribute to his genius for he was entirely self-taught. His self-attained power of language he attributed to his constant reading of the Bible and a dictionary. This was what a boy who had sold clothes pins and trinkets, and mended chairs achieved.

Like a gipsy he had a deep sense of music in his soul. Hereto he was again self-trained and though his singing was technically untrained he did what hosts of other singers never could do, lead audiences of more than one hundred thousand in hymns of praise. His success in song he attributed to his singing from the heart.

Thousands of Canadians have heard the great evangelist in his day when evangelistic missions were carried out on a large scale.

As might be expected he was early in touch with the great mission of General Booth of the Salvation Army.

Gipsy Smith used the appeal of song in his mission for the souls of men and women.

The world must admire the wholehearted spirit of such men, who though seemingly handicapped by conditions, yet triumphed over them to become great religious leaders serving their era in a manner which leaves lasting influences upon the heart and soul of countless human beings.

Volkswagen

Full production of the German "volkswagen" a car which it might have had a marked effect in the world automobile market, thinks Lloyd D. Worden, chief of the automotive and aeronautics unit of the Office of Technical Services, U. S. Department of Commerce.

Hitler ordered the volkswagen designed in February, 1936, to sell for less than 1,000 reichsmarks (then $400). Dr. Robert Porsche produced a two-seat coach for four adults and one child. The four-cylinder air-cooled engine located in the rear was to develop 23.5 horsepower at 3,000 revolutions per minute.

Manufacturing plans were in an advanced stage just before the war started. Ultimately the volkswagen became the German "jeep," being the standard amphibian use. The plant at Fallersleben is now producing several thousand cars a month under British supervision.

Silence for Sale

Poets and lovers have long claimed that silence is golden but it has remained for a Kentucky radio station to give tangible proof of this to us less inspired and more commercial members of mankind. WKYW in Louisville not only sells its airtime to sponsors as does any other radio station, but when it is not on the air it sells its eleven hours of silence to a mattress company.

We agree that this all sounds topsy-turvy and the kind of a deal that could be put over only by a salesman like the famous little man who wasn't there. But to a country flooded with audible advertising of all types the silence program is such a shock that it really might speak louder than words. — New York Herald Tribune.

High in the crown of an old fir resis the crow's nest, strongly built of twigs and grasses and mud. About it, wheeling in the arrogance of their strength, flap the parent birds, cawing discordant as they lumber in from the flock. Secure alike from the smaller species, whose nests they rob, and from the creatures of the ground, which scale lower trees for eggs, they clamor in lusty pride, filling the air with a bully's vulgarity. — Victoria Times.

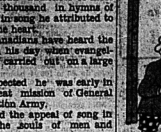
CHILDREN'S NOISE



"Yes," I said unto their mother,
"home's a rather noisy place.
And the children are disturbing as indoors and out they race.
It's distracting, I'm admitting, now and then to have them shriek
So loudly that we grownups cannot hear each other speak.
There are times you beg for silence, but
I want to tell you this
That's the sort of noise I'm hoping you will never have to miss.

"It's an empty house I dwell in, and a lonely life I live;
And to have it ring with laughter all I own I'd gladly give.
To hear shrieking and disputing—as I did long years ago.
When the children still were with us—
now would set my eyes aglow.
For the screaming and the crying and the lusty way they shout
Are the noises, time has taught me, it is hard to do without.

"It is true at times it's trying when the children race the stairs
And you know what mischief they are doing just to settle their affairs.
There are countless times they fret you; times their spirits you have to nurse;
Times you beg them to be quiet, but a silent house is worse!
For you'll think the shouts of youngsters are the sweetest music ever reached
And you'll hate your peaceful dwelling, if you ever live alone."

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

How high do birds fly?

The South American condor probably ascends to greater altitudes than any other bird. It is believed that it sometimes goes up to a height of four miles.

Owing to the rarity of the atmosphere most small birds when taken up in aircraft become insensible at about 18,000 feet altitude than that. Twenty miles up there is only 1/20th as much air as there is at sea level, and aviators without special protection begin to suffer painfully when they attain an altitude of 15,000 feet.

It is probable that birds ascend to greater altitudes than ever high mountains than elsewhere. Although aviators do not encounter birds at greater altitudes than 15,000 feet, mountain climbers on Mt. Everest reported seeing lammergeiers, curlews and choughs flying at 25,000 feet, which is nearly four miles.

Migrating birds generally fly under the lowest clouds and it is unusual for them to fly higher at altitudes greater than three to four thousand feet. Geese, cranes, rooks and lapwings are among the highest flying birds, but even they fly comparatively low when the weather is cloudy or otherwise unfavorable.

Many of the reports of birds flying at great heights come from astronomers who see flocks of migratory birds passing between the telescope and the heavenly body being observed. Such testimony should be accepted with caution. A British astronomer reported to London "Times" that he photographed wild geese flying between his telescope and the sun at an altitude that he estimated at nearly five miles.

The Egyptian goose, a handsome species native of wild goose native to the Near East, is reputed to ascend to heights of 35,000 feet, and there are frequent reports of birds reaching even greater altitude.

Govt. Will Not Intervene Further To Ease Housing

Ottawa, Aug. 5 — (CP) — With calls growing for further state intervention to relieve the housing shortage, the Federal Government —in the opinion of its No. 1 housing official—is considering self-committed deeply enough already.

That opinion was expressed in an interview yesterday by Hugh John Mcdonald, head of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, who says that has assumed most of the Government's responsibility for housing.

Although the situation posed by rising costs was probably "tighter" than at any time since the end of the war and could be termed "dangerous," it had to be remembered that Ottawa already was building or backing the building of more than 20,000 homes, had some 40,000 under its wing and had reached the point where its ability to guarantee further priorities in materials had almost been exhausted.

Exclusive of the Veterans Land Act, the Government was assuming responsibility for approximately 3,500 homes started by Housing Enterprises, Ltd., to enable industry which gave up its plans for 10,000 units; was completing 4,000 for Veterans Land Act clients and 8,000 to 10,000 wartime housing units; was encouraging the speculative construction of 4,000 to 5,000 homes under the accelerated housing plan and hundreds of others under the National Housing Act.

It already was subsidizing rents to the extent of millions and was negotiating subsidies in the form of contingent grants to men who build under the V.L.A.

Mr. Mcdonald said he would guess that 60,000 homes would be completed this year, compared with 141,000 completed in 1946. The gap between costs and the price potential buyers were willing to pay was at fault. It was probably not necessary to cut the red-room house for less than $6,000.

There were three ways out, Mr. Mcdonald suggested: Intervention to build homes for rent or sale at a reduced basis, or a sharp reduction in national income and employment which would wipe out demand.

Battle Dozen Forest Fires In Nova Scotia

Halifax, Aug. 8 — (CP) — Shimmering heat and a pall of smoke hung over Nova Scotia today as heavy firefighters, working in temperatures that soared to 90, fought a dozen forest fires and grimly awaited new outbreaks.

At the same time three other fires which have been burning in mainland — one of them threatened a community — and another three were burning near Moncton, N. B., on Thursday, destroyed valuable timberland were consumed last summer.

Weather forecasts promised no relief for drought-stricken Cape Breton where woodlands and mills drying up and all-time high temperatures were being recorded.

The worst outbreak was on Chetlamp Island, divided from the western Cape Breton coast and the village of Chetlamp by a half-mile wide strait. Fires had ravaged the entire northern section of the island, destroying 200 homes of the 15 families who dwell there. Villagers watched the fire warily, fearing that a sudden shift in the wind would send leaping sparks into their community of 2,700.

Fires were out south of Chetlamp, 1,200 acres of spruce have fallen victim to the devastating flames.

At Catalone, 17 miles east of Sydney, four families have been forced to evacuate their homes and four other families moved nearby between Sydney and New Waterford. At Nyanza, south of Sydney, several buildings and thousands of cords of timber have gone up in flames.

Newest outbreak on the Nova Scotia mainland was at Five Islands, where a stubborn flash fire has been burning for five days. The fire was less than two miles from the St. Augustine Monastery.

ARE YOU REALLY AS OLD AS YOU ACT?

After all, I suppose it is a daring stunt for a man of seventy to enroll a somersault—as daring as it was for Charlie Bradbury to do strongings (which Noah Webster still calls somersaults) on the green lawns of Main Street homes in Canandaigua along the way to and from the old Central Academy. But was child's play for Charlie and for the reason that he assumed most of the Government's responsibility for housing.

But was child's play for Charlie and for the reason that he assumed even tried to emulate Charlie's prowess, usually making a fog of it, but another stunt Charlie sometimes performed to the dismay of all the other kids was really daring—he would run along on the flagstone walk there by the old schoolhouse on Chapel Street, take a flying leap and land—believe it or not, I can summon credible witnesses to corroborate it, and I don't mean my brother Andy—land on his plaster cast.

Rolling somersaults (my kind, one rolls on floor or ground like a hoop and never for an instant loses contact with floor or flagstone), are fine for you if you break your neck trying to do what Webster describes as somersault and I call an "atapring."

I suppose it goes back to a certain amount of daring to roll a somersault if you are really as old as you actually are, rather dignified, fragile, set or infectious with rheumatism or what have you, fifty, sixty or seventy? Well, try it, sir.

In the Invitation to the Somersaultaqua (available at no extra request—a rather difficult word to spell—if you incline stamped envelope addressed to yourself) you will find the technique described and illustrated. The illustration is simple and clear enough and I'm not sure now that the directions provided for the stretch-ee curled up as tightly as he could and then uncurled as far as he could unfurl and as straight as possible and stay so until the roll is completed—and not entitled to PLEASE include in its care of a school. Incidentally the teacher had better ask the pupil to PLEASE omit the clipping. Bon fide school teachers and those fine duties of medicine are the only people I can serve in this way. To the others the complete set is available at $4.50 in the U.S., $5 in Canada.

Soviet influence is strong, though hidden, on the Japanese Communist party — several of whose leaders were trained in Moscow — and the more radical labor unions. The Russian diplomatic mission is the largest in town, with several hundred personnel, all of whom seem busy.

Skaters Train at Schumacher Summer School

—Timmins Daily Press

Race Discrimination Unknown At Youths' Camp in Belgrade

(Daniel's De Luce, AP roving reporter now touring the Russian-dominated Balkans, gives a revealing sidelight on life in Marshal Tito's Yugoslavia in this dispatch).

BY DANIEL DE LUCE

Belgrade—(AP)—Two cherubs with toy Tommy-guns guard the red-starred gate to a children's paradise.

Under the spreading limbs of an oak, a merry-go-round whirls as if forever. The woods echo with the bouncing strains of a Cossack dance. Ball fields and sand boxes are crowded.

But it is a serious business entering the promised land. The guards, one of whom has blonde pigtails and a gingham skirt, was on the lookout for parents who try to sneak in for more than the one allotted visit a week.

Their Tommy-guns look quite realistic. They cost $1.86 at a state toy store in Belgrade.

Here is a new camp in the former Royal suburb, Dedinje, Yugoslav "pioneers," aged seven to 14, have what they call a republic. Their older brothers and sisters from the Anti-Fascist Youth Association, helped build it. Teachers from the Peoples Front supervise it.

For $6 if they can afford it, or otherwise gratis, children come here for 15-day outings from the city.

The cost-free republic, its sponsors say, is a sample of the good life which Yugoslavia is going to enjoy in increasing measure from Marshal Tito's five-year plan.

Nearby is the Belgrade golf course which once attracted wealthy sportsmen. Now it is a convalescent centre for invalid babies.

The children's republic, like those for Yugoslav adults, has universal suffrage and equal rights for the fair sex. But it also boasts of five meals a day and is the only republic where bread is unrationed.

There is no race discrimination. One eager, 11-year-old Montenegrin, Radovan Radoman, was the first leader elected by the entire camp, but formidary units have also chosen Serbs, Croats, Slovenes, Macedonians and Scotians for minor posts.

Woman, 95, Had No Fears of Her First Plane Ride

Wiarton, Aug. 5 — (CP) — Mrs. Charity Bowden, 95, of Wiarton fulfilled a life-long ambition Tuesday when she stepped out of an aircraft here having completed her first flight. "Years ago I wasn't afraid of lynx and bear that used to stand on the path to our house when Wiarton was only bush," said Mrs. Bowden. "Why should I be afraid of a little airplane ride?"

Stop early drop... Spray with PARMONE

For fewer windfalls, better fruit, longer picking season, spray trees with PARMONE, the C-I-L hormone concentrate.

PARMONE prevents or greatly reduces preharvest drop of apples and pears — in some cases, as much as 85%. Fruit clings longer and more firmly to the trees, improves in colour, quality and size.

Fruit Reaches Full Maturity

PARMONE allows fruit to reach full maturity, though it does not delay normal ripening processes. Hence, fruit should be picked at the proper stage of maturity.

Insure better fruit by spraying thoroughly with PARMONE immediately dropping begins.

PARMONE is effective, costs little. One 4-ounce bottle makes 100 gallons of spray, and one spraying is usually sufficient. Ask your dealer for PARMONE.

Steel Exports To be Controlled In U.S. Oct. 1st

Washington, Aug. 5 — (AP) — The United States will revert Oct. 1 to its strict wartime control over steel exports.

These require government approval of both the country which is to receive the metal and the use there to which it is to be put.

Since shortly after the war American exporters have been permitted to jump their orders and ask permission to ship a specific tonnage.

Currently Norway, The Netherlands, and France are the three largest buyers of American steel. Some is also being shipped to Italy, Denmark, Sweden and Finland. Argentina buys large amounts. Britain produces most of her own steel, and is exporting some.

Searches for English Bride and Son

Westville, N.S., Aug. 5—(CP)—Wilfred Simmonds was still searching for his English war bride and their 16-months-old son Paul after a fruitless trip to Sydney, N. S., to check a report she had been seen there.

Mrs. Simmonds and the child left home July 26 while her husband was attending a convention in Saint John, N. B., and except for a report that a woman and child answering their description were seen in Sydney last weekend, there has been no word of them.

HEAT SCORCHES CHICAGO

Chicago, Aug. 7 — (AP) — One-hundred degree heat seared sections of the midwest for the fourth successive day yesterday and boosted the toll of heat deaths in the United States to at least 48. In Chicago alone the record heat wave in 36 years has caused 28 deaths.

Toronto Shelter Tenants Threaten Call Rent Strike

Toronto, Aug. 5 — (CP) — Tenants in the city's emergency shelter at Stanley Barracks on the Canadian National Exhibition grounds, protesting what they term unsanitary conditions of the barracks, today threatened to call a "rent strike" against the city.

Jack Fegan, spokesman for the close to 3,000 persons who live in the former army barracks, said they want supplies of disinfectant, cockroach exterminator, paint and needy repairs to leaking water pipes and unusable washroom facilities.

The emergency shelter tenants point out that millions of dollars are going into repairs and new buildings at the Exhibition grounds "and not a sticker to be spent to make this place liveable."

The only thing being done, Fegan said, was a paint job on the outside of the buildings, so that "Exhibition crowds won't be offended by the sight of things as they are."

"We can't get a drop of paint to use on the inside," he added.

Yesterday quarantine was imposed on the occupants of one block at the barracks when a seven-year-old girl was discovered suffering from poliomyelitis. Five families with 15 children live in the quarantined block.

Howard Hughes Takes Firing Line

Washington, Aug. 5. —(AP)— Howard Hughes took the firing line Thursday to shoot between 200 and 500 questions" at Senator Owen Brewster's emphatic denial that the Maine Republican ever offered to call off the current senatorial war-plane probe in exchange for an airline merger.

Brewster, who heads the Senate War Investigating Committee, capped his assertion that he "never" made any such move with a choked-voice declaration that he is convinced efforts were made to "trap" and "intimidate" him.

Against this, Hughes whose $40,000,000 in wartime plane contracts are the central issue before the committee, apparently was prepared by an overnight study of Brewster's testimony to try to punch holes in the Senator's story.

The hard-hitting young millionaire had his own right hand reporter on hand to take a transcript of Brewster's remarks.

During his 30-minute appearance as a witness Wednesday Hughes charged that "in so many words" the Maine Senator had proposed at a hotel luncheon here last February that the inquiry need go no further "if I agreed to merge the T.W.A. airline with Pan-American and agreed to go along with the bill for a single overseas airline."

Shipping Season Starts At Churchill Now Under Way

By JOHN LEBLANC
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Aug. 8 — (CP) — Already bedevilled by two major marine mishaps this summer Hudson Bay enters on its bob-tailed commercial shipping season this week with all hands hoping trouble doesn't strike in threes.

As the first freighter of the new season was bound up Hudson Strait today on the way to Churchill, Man., Canada's northern grain-shipping port, and trade department officials here said she would be followed by several more before the close of navigation in about nine weeks.

At last official report the Essex Trader headed the inbound procession of ships as she did last year, she was threading the same route through the strait as the R. M. S. Nascopie, the ill - fated Hudson Bay Company supply ship that cracked up off Cape Dorset a few weeks ago and was abandoned as a total loss.

And near her destination lay the bones of another company supply vessel — the Neophyte — which followed the Nascopie to a sea grave in the icy waters only a few days to mark down this season as one of the most unfortunate in the history of northern shipping.

Despite the adverse luck of her predecessors, the Essex Trader was being sent in to do something of a trail-blazing job. Not only was the 7,327-ton vessel due to take out a substantial tonnage of grain for Britain but she was carrying about the largest inbound cargo ever destined for Churchill.

How many more ships will use the northern route this year was not known to trade department officials here, but they expected the number would at least approximate last year's dozen.

As leader of these arrivals, the Essex Trader will be greeted at Churchill with ceremony. A special train was due to carry a group from Saskatchewan to meet the ship.

Vetoes Bridge Bill Because of Exemption

Washington, Aug. 8 — (AP) — President Roosevelt vetoed Thursday a bill to create a St. Lawrence bridge commission and build a bridge across the St. Lawrence River near Ogdensburg, N. Y.

The president said he objected to a tax exemption provision written into the bill.

Mr. Truman said in his memorandum of disapproval that a very similar" bill was passed in 1932 which provided that bridge bonds would be exempted from all taxes.

The bridge, he said, has not been built under the 1933 act and since that time the government has adopted a policy that such legislation "should be limited to provision exempting the facilities constructed pursuant thereto or the obligations created to meet the cost thereof or the revenues derived there from taxation." He added that such exemptions "should be a matter for determination by the states in which the facilities might be located."

The effect of the new bill he said, would "be to re-enact as new legislation the act as originally approved in June 14, 1933, including the objectionable tax exemption provision."

Railways Rush Empty Cars Across Border

Ottawa, Aug. 8 (CP)—Trains of freight cars, some with cargo and others empty, were rolling south across the Canadian-American border as Canadian railways made every effort to return vital cars to United States roads to prevent a threatened United States embargo on railway freight car movement northward.

R. S. Liberty, transport controller, had no comment to make on reports from Washington that the Office of Defence Transportation probably would delay until next week a decision on any action to curtail shipments to Canada, particularly coal shipments. The transport controller said merely that it was "good news."

Thought he declined to speculate if the Canadian railways could reduce the adverse balance of United States cars in Canada to the 8,000 figure set by Washington as a minimum to avoid embargo action, other sources here were inclined to believe that the figure would be met and that there would be no embargo.

Mr. Liberty said he had no further figures from those given out last Saturday when the adverse balances of cars had been reduced to 8,013 from more 18,000 six weeks ago. He said, however, that the railways were "making every effort" to get the cars back, regard or otherwise, particularly coal gondolas, which United States lines need badly.

Marmora Amateur Show By Ken Soble Features Reunion

Marmora — Marmora Fair Grounds were thronged on Saturday evening for the Old Boys' Reunion program. A new arrival in the midway created considerable interest, "The Smallest Canada in Miniature". A. Paulin, now of Welland, Ont., in a remodelled bus showed rural scenes of Canada characteristic of the twelve months of the year as well as that of a square dance in which the carved figures dance to music. The figures and the settings are carved from pine wood. Mr. Paulin, a native of Latsi Magyarorszag, was crippled at Jackmer, Maine, at the age, of twenty-six as a pile of frames fell on him during lumbering operations. After three years in hospital he went on to wood with hobbies of his craftsmanship which, from a modest beginning, has developed into the protentious exhibit which he has shown at various three main attractions on Tuesday evening.

Campbellford band gave a fine concert extending about an hour to be followed by a Ken Soble Amateur show. Those who were artists who were not entered in the contest. Three prizes were given for the best numbers and were awarded as follows:

Large Skirts Highlight Parisian Fashion Show

Paris, Aug. 3 (AP)—The "new look" in women's fashions—the fuller, fancy skirt silhouette—with its sloping line bustle at the back, was displayed by 14 Dior fashion models shown in his Avenue Montaigne place.

His skirts are incredibly large all around with pleats and full gathers. One of them had 40 years of material. Even the jackets of Dior's "look of '50 has sent by Joe Systak, an acquaintance of Kate, who as a dancing belle ruled the men of the trail almost as much as the girls of the camp, which clutched the land.

The inscription is on a small stone which he will place on the grave of Johnny Matson, the sourdough who wed the queen.

Now a resident of Sand, Ore., Mrs. Kate Matson came to Vancouver to arrange for someone to take the stone to where Johnny lies buried in the flower garden at the door of his wilderness cabin. She stayed just long enough to tell once again her famous love story.

Back of the annual letter which Johnny tramped more than miles through Arctic snows to mail to "beloved Kate". And she told of the parting when Johnny sent her "outside" because he believed the northern trails too dangerous for her.

Year after year we yearned for him to come out to see his child make our home together. But it was always too cold, she smiled gently. His final letter ended: "If I don't make it, I am tired after this trip. It was not even signed.

She was found dead in a lonely frail cabin, a scant nine miles from Johnny's home in the beyond.

Those trails", Kate reminisced, "were the only rivals I ever had for Johnny's love."

Klondike Kate Sends Epitaph To the Yukon

Vancouver, (CP)—Klondike Kate's last act as epitaph from the northland, writing the closing chapter to a love story that became a legend.

She died in the Yukon hills she loved," is the simple inscription which the 76-year-old former dance hall queen of '98 has sent by Joe Systak, an acquaintance of Kate, who as a dancing belle ruled the men of the trail almost as much as the girls of the camp, which clutched the land.

The inscription is on a small stone which he will place on the grave of Johnny Matson, the sourdough who wed the queen.

When Company Comes to Stay

Whether company drops in unexpectedly or invited guests are staying for a week or so, one thing that covers the hostess with glory and gives her wonderful sense of satisfaction is to visit comfortably with them all afternoon, then have a meal on the table in the proverbial forty winks.

Even though summer weather continues it is advisable to have at least one hot dish at each meal, so, it does require some careful planning to prepare dinner in ten minutes or so.

Such menus may very well be planned around cold meat and a dessert made in the morning when it is cool. Then hot soup and a crisp salad with a tangy dressing rounds out a meal that appeals to summer appetites.

A cheese dish such as a Strata or a Welsh Rarebit or the main course, if prepared in the cool of the morning it may be stored in a cool place until an hour before meal time then popped into a moderate oven to cook slowly while mother sits calmly visiting with her guests. Then with vegetables quickly cooked and fresh fruit for dessert another meal is put on the table with minimum fuss and bother. The recipe for Bologna Cups With Hot Potato Salad given below, is a hot main course dish for this time picture. The salad may be prepared in advance and heated at the last moment while the Bologna cups are being prepared.

The home economists of the Consumer Section, Dominion Department of Agriculture, suggest the following recipes:

Bologna Cups With Hot Potato Salad

2 cups diced, cooked potato
2 sweet pickles, chopped
1 hard cooked egg, chopped
1 tablespoon chopped onion
3 tablespoons vinegar
Salad dressing to moisten
Salt and pepper.
6 slices large bologna

Combine everything but bologna. Heat in top of double boiler. Do not remove casing from bologna, which should be cut a little thicker than usual. Heat in a little hot fat in frying pan until edges curl up to form a cup. Fill with hot potato salad, garnish with parsley. Creamed vegetables may replace hot potato salad.

Jellied Veal in Green Peppers

2 to 2½ lbs. veal shank
2 quarts water
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon celery seed or few sprigs celery leaves
1 small onion sliced
1 small carrot cut in half

Place veal, water, salt, celery seed, onion and carrot in kettle. Cover, and simmer until meat falls from the bones, about 1½ to 2 hours. Dice meat—there should be about two cups. Strain stock and boil in an open kettle 10 to 15 minutes, or until flavor is concentrated.

2 tablespoons gelatine
¼ cup cold water
2 cups veal stock

2 tablespoons chopped sweet red pepper or pimiento
2 cups chopped veal
6 medium green peppers

Soak gelatine in cold water. Add hot veal stock, set aside to cool. When it begins to stiffen add chopped red pepper or pimiento and veal. Wash and remove seeds from peppers. Fill with meat mixture. Chill until firm. Cut in slices crosswise. Serve on lettuce. Six servings.

Serve the following meat loaf if you need quantity as well as quality.

Meat Loaf

2 lbs. beef, ground
1 lb. pork, ground
1 lb. veal, ground
2 slices bread
1 to 1¼ cups milk or warm water
2 medium sized onions, minced
2 tablespoons salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
2 eggs
2 cups chili sauce (optional)

Mix meats thoroughly with bread softened in the warm milk or water. Add seasonings and beaten eggs. Pack into two 3 x 4 x 8 inch loaf pans and cover with chili sauce. Bake in moderately hot oven, (375-F) about 60 minutes or until done. Serves 10 to 12.

Canning Corner.

Tomatoes are one of the easiest foods to can successfully, either whole or as juice and their bright color and fresh flavor add interest to many hot dishes during winter months. In addition, canned tomatoes make a nice vegetable served cold or hot, spiced or plain and tomato juice rates high both in palatability and as a source of vitamin C.

The following directions in canning tomatoes and juice are recommended by the home economists of the Consumer Section, Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Cold Pack Tomatoes

Choose firm, ripe tomatoes. Set aside the irregular or broken ones to make juice. Blanch tomatoes 15 to 60 seconds to loosen skins. Remove stem and peel. Pack in clean, hot sealers or in plain tin cans, adding 1 teaspoon salt per Swedish elementary schools. In quart sealer or 20-ounce tin can. Cover with hot tomato juice made by cooking, in a covered pan for 5 minutes, the irregular, broken or very large tomatoes, (which have had their skins removed and the cores cut out) and pressing through sieve or puree. Fill sealers ½ inch headspace in jars and ½ inch in tins. Leave ½ inch headspace in glass sealers and ¼ inch headspace in tin cans. Process in boiling water bath for quantities for quarts and 20-ounce tin cans and 25-minutes for quarts and 20-ounce tin cans.

Because of their acidity, tomatoes may be processed in an oven which is accurately heat controlled. Process pints and 20-ounce tin cans at 275-F. for 30 minutes and quarts and 24-ounce tin cans for 45 minutes.

Wash tomatoes, remove cores but do not peel, cut tomatoes in pieces, cook, stirring occasionally, covered pan 5 minutes. Press through sieve or puree. Bring juice to boiling point. Pour into containers leaving ½-inch headspace in glass sealers and ¼-inch in plain tin cans. Add 1 teaspoon salt per quart or 20-ounce tin can. Adjust rubber rings and tops. Process in boiling water bath for 15 minutes for pints, quarts, 20 and 24-ounce tin cans, or in an oven with automatic heat control for 20 minutes.

Political Opponents of F.D.R. Still Fighting Against Him

By CLYDE BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Aug. 8.—(CP)—President Franklin D. Roosevelt has been in his grave more than two years but his political opponents still fight him and the anti-Roosevelt campaign reached a climax this week in a closed-lit committee room of the Senate office building here.

Col. Elliott Roosevelt, second son of the late President whose exploits in war won him high honors and whose activities as a newsman as a student of international affairs won him some notoriety, was in the spotlight.

The Senate War Expenditures Investigating Committee, spearheaded by Republican Senators Homer Ferguson of Michigan and Owen Brewster of Maine as chief inquisitors, put on the show.

Main objective seemed to be to create the impression or establish the fact if it existed, that the late President, urged by his son, overrode expert advice and gave a $22,000,000 contract for aircraft to the company headed by Howard Hughes, youthful multi-millionaire airplane builder and motion picture producer.

To reach this objective the committee had discovered that the Hughes company had spent some $160,000 over a four-year period in lavish entertainment of those who might help getting business for the firm.

The committee was particularly interested in vouchers supplied by the Hughes Company showing that some $5,000 had been spent in entertainment of Col. Roosevelt and his friends.

So, in order to reach the long dead Roosevelt Senior, the committee performed under a battery of klieg lights witnesses talking into eight microphones, a battery of motion picture cameras recording every gesture and every word.

Crowds Throng Room

Crowds thronged the committee room and stood in long rows outside the Chamber for a glimpse of the principals.

Inside the room the chubby, high-pressure Public Relations Council for the Hughes interests, John W. Meyer, told how he had lavishly entertained Col. Roosevelt and his friends but refused over and over again that he did the action for "1,001 others."

It was a story of glamorous moving picture actresses, expensive night clubs and the country's most famous hostelries at which Meyer threw parties so frequently that the committee did not question him when he said "I had to work 24 hours a day."

It seemed that Elliott Roosevelt met his actress wife, Faye Emerson, at one of these parties. That he knew a host of the lavish entertainment regretted, even to the financing of marriage parties.

Elliott vehemently denied that he had ever discussed the Hughes contract with his father or that he had been influenced by entertainment.

Rebuttal Wins Praise

His rebuttal, which won him praise and thanks from the committee and applause from the crowd, was that he had been flying over the west Indies when much of the alleged entertainment for him took place; that the army procurement board failed to follow his recommendation about the Hughes plane and that there had been nothing illegal or unethical about his activities.

The stories of wining and dining and glamorous actresses made great newspaper copy and the Senators got a great deal of publicity in words and pictures.

Hours were spent discussing purchases and expenditures in such amounts as $8, $3 and other amounts, and about the identity of this or that actress.

But through it all ran the main theme of discrediting, through his survivors, the president who has never been forgiven by his political enemies for getting himself elected four times in succession with, at times, the most widespread support ever given a candidate for that office.

This and other political activities would give the onlooker the impression that in the 1948 presidential elections the man to beat is still Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Kamal, Madoera Is Town of Death Says Eyewitness

By JAMES HALSEMA

Kamal, Madoera, Aug. 8 (AP)—This is a town of death.

The Dutch naval force which landed here Sunday found death and potential death everywhere.

Lt.-Cmdr. Pieter Elias, Dutch naval officer commanding the area at the southwest tip of the island, in sight of the Java naval base of Soerabaia three miles across the muddy strait, showed me yesterday a few of the inhabitants who defied the Indonesian order to evacuate to the interior.

The Kampong (village compound) had three inhabitants: A shrunken half-naked grandmother, a bony mother, and a sore-covered boy of 10 with a distended stomach.

Cool, who spent five years in the Nazi concentration camp at Buchenwald, Germany, for underground activities and the suppression of the people here reminded him of those rescued by the United States 3rd army in the Reich.

The mother said her family was ordered out of the compound four months ago and returned today to find their houses stripped. The village is overgrown with weeds. Trees are beginning to sprout through the thatched roofs. Thousands of Madoerese crossed the channel months ago to Soerabaja.

Skeletons in Houses

In five houses entered, skeletons of men and women and one baby lay unburied where they died. Another compound contained a man moaning from the pain of dysentery.

Trees and telephone lines are festooned with home-made grenades attached to trip wires. The roads are full of such bombs and five-inch shells taken from the Netherlands naval arsenal nearby. The arsenal was partly destroyed during the Japanese occupation and later was stripped completely by the Indonesians.

The cease-fire order caught the Dutch in an awkward situation with this operation only partially completed. The marines landing at Kamal occupied Bangkalan in an overland push.

The Dutch civil affairs office, here said the marines occupied Pamekasan after the cease-fire order, in order to prevent Indonesians from firing public buildings.

At Soerabaja headquarters in Java a Dutch spokesman had said the timing of the Madoera operation was prompted by the arrival of a quantity of rice in East Java which would permit feeding Madoera's 3,000,000 people.

Much of Doubtful Hay Crop May Be Salvaged

Toronto, Aug. 8—(CP)—Warm weather unhampered by rain enabled Ontario farmers to make up time lost by previous heavy rains which drenched hay crops, a report by the Ontario Department of Agriculture disclosed today.

The report indicated that much of the doubtful hay crop may be salvaged as hot weather has dried crops sufficiently for stacking, although many farmers still have hay in the fields.

Month 1st wheat has been cut and some threshing has been done with yields better than average. Early sown spring grains are ripening but late sown crops are likely to be a failure.

Lack of adequate labor continues to be a major problem, the report said.

Peterborough Fire Unknown Origin Verdict of Jury

Peterborough, Aug. 8—(CP)—A coroner's jury investigating the $1,250,000 fire here last July 11, which claimed three lives and destroyed the Wheaton wool warehouse, found the fire was of unknown origin.

The jury has ruled that the deaths of the three men, James Hawthorne, 63, George Colman, 43, and George Clements, 49, warehouse employees, were caused by suffocation.

Greater protection by installation of sprinkler systems and fire escapes was recommended by the jury in cases of two-storey buildings where people are employed.

Sixteen witnesses called were unable to explain why the men could not get out of the burning building. All said that there was sufficient time between the first alarm and the rapid spread of the fire along the escalator and stairway to enable them to escape.

No cause of the fire presented itself to the witnesses or jury, spontaneous combustion being suggested as a cause but rejected because of the type of oil used on the wool — a type unsuitable to combustion.

TWO MORE RESTAURANTS CLOSED FOR UNSANITARY CAUSES

Toronto, Aug. 8 — (CP)—Two more restaurants have been ordered closed by city health officials for unsanitary conditions. This brings to four the number of eating places closed in the current drive to provide more sanitary conditions for restaurant-eaters.

At a meeting of city council Tuesday, Mayor Saunders was critical of the civic health inspection staff in claiming that it should not have been necessary to start a special drive to discover unsanitary conditions.

Inspectors reported that of 1,350 restaurants checked last week, more this season, William "Bill" Star of Donald's Brook, caught 16 in his weir during one tide. The same tide also brought in a bumper catch of mackerel.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

The perils of Pauline were never as great as those of a bridge player. Polly had only the villain to contend with. A bridger must be on his guard against a partner as well as two opponents.

In response to an opening bid of one your basics are few and simple. You pass or you don't. If you bid you follow the order of choice in T-A-N; takeout, assist, no-trump.

When you decide to T or A or N, you also decide whether you jump or not. If you jump, you say you already see tricks enough to make a game. Without seeing enough for a game, you do not jump.

That, in a nutshell, is practically all there is to it if no bid intervenes. To adjust your first responses after an intervening bid by an opponent, add two features.

If your response is in no-trump, have the opponent suit stopped. If you can help defeat the opponent bid, double for bigger penalties. When in doubt about having any of these things, you can pass.

Partner opens with one spade when you have this hand:

♥A K 3
♦A 8 4 2
♣9 7 5 3

You have no biddable suit for a takeout. You have not adequate support in spades for an assist in that suit. You have enough for a no-trump response. Your three high cards tell you so.

But suppose an opponent intervenes with a bid of two clubs. It gives you something else to consider. You do not have the opponent suit stopped. Your no-trump bid may be misleading.

However, with what partner has promised in high cards and sure tricks, can opponents make two clubs? You have enough strength to help defeat the two club bid of the opposition. So, you double.

It turns out that your pair defeats the two club bid by two tricks. But at a time when your pair could have made a slam. This is when you would gladly change places with Pauline.

The Movie Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, Aug. 8 —(CP)— Bob Hope, whose activities have rushed at a break-neck speed in recent years, is going to slow down a bit. After his current film, he plans to devote his time to his air show and not make another picture until February or after.

The sleek-beaked comic is again enlivening this sleepy town, having recovered from his ills. He told me his sunburn was inflicted after he slept but one hour in the Equator sun. Even more painful was a tooth extraction when he got back here. "They had to dig down to my hip for it," he said.

Troubles Over.

Burt Lancaster and Producer Hal Wallis have patched up their troubles. The actor now will do one film a year for Wallis, the rest on his own.

Susan Hayward tells me she plans to make no films away from her boss, Walter Wanger. A recent experience on a loan-out convinced her. She believes that a performer's long-range welfare is safer at one's home lot.

Sydney Greenstreet has been released from his Warners' duties for the rest of the year and will be able to do two films on the outside. They shape up as "Prelude to Night" with Zachary Scott, Lynn Bari, and Louis Hayward, and "The Velvet Touch" with Rosalind Russell. Sydney is still anxious to play Benjamin Franklin on the screen, for which he'd be a natural.

He also has offers from England to play "Father Brown, Detective" from the G. K. Chesterton stories.

Flattered but Wary.

Ricardo Mantalban says he's flattered by reports he'll play Rudolph Valentino, but he's wary of the role. He doesn't want to be typed as the imitator of the great Latin lover. His next after "On An Island With You" will be a father-and-son story, with Jose Iturbi.

"A male Bergman" is being sought by Leo McCarey for the role opposite Ingrid in "Adam and Eve." He has to have a physique which will stand considerable exposure (that eliminates many leading men.) Johnny Weissmuller will test for the role.

June Allyson joins Dick Powell in Arizona after she finishes "Virtuous" next week, despite 118-degree heat on his location down there. . . . Kathryn Grayson and Johnny Johnston will honeymoon in the Canadian Rockies after their Aug. 21 wedding.

The Al Jolsons and the Harry James have moved into the Del Mar Turf and Surf Hotel for the racing season. . . .

Dulmage Motors Trounce Bankers

Pounding out five runs in the first inning and six more in the second inning the Dulmage Motors trounced the Bankers nine 16-6 in a Commercial League softball game at the Alemite Field last Wednesday evening.

Four hit, two of them home runs by Theobald and Nickol, plus several errors on the part of the Bankers team, gave Dulmage's five runs in the first frame. They returned to the attack in the second inning with two hits for six runs. McGuire hit a homer with the bases loaded, while more Banker errors left the pitcher in a hole. Dulmage's scored one run in the third, three in the fifth and one more in the seventh, to pile up their one-sided win.

The Bankers counted their first run in the fourth inning when Tummon scored after being walked. They counted three more tallies in the sixth on four hits, one a homer by Tummon with no one on. Two hits and a base on balls gave the "Moneymen" their last two runs.

Nolan hurled for the Dulmage team striking out six, walking five, and giving up nine hits for six runs. Tummon, the Bankers hurler, struck out seven, walked five, and gave up eleven hits for sixteen runs.

Davis Cup Team Defeats Canadians In Both Singles Matches

By ROBERT CLARKE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, Aug. 4 — (CP) — Australia's Davis Cup team, victorious in their opening singles matches, needed only a victory in the doubles today to dispose of Canada and advance into the inter-zone final against Czechoslovakia.

Dinny Pells and Geoff Brown, representing the land down under, won their singles contests yesterday against Rehri Hochon and Brandon Mackey, the two Montrealers carrying the Canadian colors. But the Canadians and Mackey particularly — bowed only after fighting strongly against their more renowned opponents.

Mackey, who has gained much experience in United States collegiate play, won 6-4, 6-4, 6-1, in his contest against Brown while Hochon, playing in the day's opening match, was defeated 6-3, 6-4, 6-2 by Pells. There had been many observers who felt the Canadians might be fortunate to win two or three games apiece against the Aussies.

In today's doubles contest Australia will be represented by the veteran Jack Bromwich and Colin Long while Canada's team will comprise Gordie MacNeil and Ritzy Lechtzier, both Montreal ers like Hochon and Mackey but both newcomers to Davis Cup play. Lechtzier and Mackey played against Mexico last year. It would be the upset of the season if the Canadians managed to beat the Australian combination.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE E. CARTER, Sports Editor

Tonight at the Memorial Arena the mat feud between Whipper Watson and Kenneth Eaton and Kenny Kennedy, the effete boast of wrestling, is scheduled to be settled amicably once and for all. The part of referee in the scene of mayhem and mirth during the masters of the ring have been handled by Jack Corbett for the past two weeks, with neither satisfied with the outcome of the bouts.

Both are definitely determined that tonight's Brawl of the Behemoths will see them wear the victor's crown and take another boy along the tortuous path that leads to a crack at dashing Whipper Watson's British Empire crown. Ed Lewis is confident that Kenneth will be defeated, as he suffers on at least two occasions, while the New Zealander is equally sure that the smirking puss of the Panther will be drooped in defeat by the time the last call is sounded in the local sudseries.

Be that as it may, There will be no question about the meaning at the bar when the two face each other in the middle of tonight's card. That will be a brawl to the finish, with no quarter; even the ashes and dust many action aplenty for the faithful.

• • •

Strangler Bob Wagner, villainous graduate of the College of Applied Pashydermy, is all set to mangle the Adonis-like visage and Grecian stature of the Golden Boy Michael, he of the Shaughnessy clan. He has perfected a set of mayhemic tricks which, he claims, will see various parts of the anatomy of the Sharpie at stake before the final whistle winds. Mike merely flashes strong white teeth in a funny knowing smile. And when he smiles like that, pedzer, you'd better be quick on the draw if you don't want to sleep In Root Hill. Popular Pat Flanagan and Dangerous Dan O'Connor, meet in the opener.

The winners of the Point Anne Leafs - C.N.R. Veterans softball playoffs have drawn their old enemies Kingston in the first round of the Intermediate "A" playdowns, according to playdown statistics released yesterday by the Ontario Amateur Softball Association.

The first game is scheduled for Kingston on August 26 with the return game here on August 28. Third game, if necessary will be played on Sept. 4. Winners of the Kingston - Belleville series will meet the victors of the Oshawa - Peterborough series with the first game on Sept. 9 at Belleville or Kingston. Second game away on Sept. 13 and third if required on Sept. 16.

Point Anne Wings will tackle with the Picton squad with the first game at Point Anne on Aug. 14 and the return at Picton on Aug. 18 with third game on Aug. 22. Winners of this series will meet either Frontenac County winners or Seed at Picton or Point Anne on August 28.

According to the OASA Rules and Regulations, floodlight games will be played for the first game in any series where the home team makes such requirements. Third and subsequent games will not be played under the lights unless both teams agree.

For the information of teams in this district the Ontario Amateur Softball Association convener who will supervise all series in the area is O. W. Pierce, 104 Murphy Street, Trenton, telephone 413.

There's many a slip twixt the cup and the mint, and four slips practically cost our Bay of Quinte golf buckaroos the Kawartha Lakes Trophy at the Kawartha Golf Tournament last Monday. The Cassidy Brothers and F. Walton of Islington nabbed the silverware with a neat aggregate score of 319 while our doughty sibilicks artists finished with a 323. Competing for the Bay of Quinte Golf and Country Club were Tommy Carruthers who fired a last 77; Murray McIntosh who slipped off form for an 80; George Phillips who marked 80 on his card and Harry Ridley who did likewise. It was the fourth finished but four strokes behind the winners and brought considerable credit to the Trent Road club.

When one takes into consideration that the tournament attended by a field of approximately of 333 golfers from all parts of the province, the performance of the Cassidy-Walton Faulkner squad is all the more creditable. Jack Cassidy well in front of a number of Ontario's top-flight links artists and while this is no alibi, had they been shooting on the form of which they are capable that handsome Kawartha lassie would have to repeating in the Bay of Quinte trophy room.

As it was, they finished in fourth place with the Cheddar Club of Hamilton and Cedar Brae, Toronto, the second place with 320 while the Kawartha Club took third money with a 322.

The fast travelling Juniors will get a busy test of their baseball prowess tonight when they travel to Belleville to take on the Shoemen in a postponed game attraction. The kids have been going great guns of late and have their last five starts — three of them league fixtures. Their fielding has been sharpened considerably and their fielding has been on the mark. The Shoemen will know that they've been in a ball game unless the Kiwanis ballloon goes up.

On Monday night the Shoemen will safari to Napanee where they cross with the league-leading Gibbardville nine. This game should be a honey of a tilt as the Gerow clan have a nose on the precarious hold on the top rung of the ladder and will go all out in an effort to strengthen it. On the other hand, the Shoemen tied for second slot with Trenton Pirates are rarin' to get back on top of the heap where they rested practically all season. Twill be worth glimpsing.

The Peterboro - Belleville Canadian Legion softball playoff series, scheduled for the Exhibition Grounds tomorrow will be played at 6:30 instead of 3:30 as formerly announced. Some change took place in the Petes veterans' plans necessitating the change in game time. This should be well worth the trip to the park for the locals are anxious to wipe off the stigma of that 21-4 shellacking the Liffiock lads handed them in the first game. The game starts at 6:30 tomorrow evening at the Fair Grounds.

Tonight at Ox Point the Point Anne Leafs will try for their third straight win over their city rivals the C.N.R. War Veterans in the city league playdowns and the right to represent Belleville in the OAGA playdowns. The Pointers are confident that they can take the four-of-seven series in four straight games and as they already have two under their belt they're looking for another to win tonight. Game starts at 8:45.

Veterans, however, according to manager Herbie Henn are equally as confident they can stop the Leafs in their tracks and go on to win the series. It's been done before and it can be done again. We should have this series all tied up by Monday night."

• • •

If the Vets lose tonight's tilt their backs will be definitely up against the wall when they clash with the Senior team in the Exhibition Grounds under the lights on Monday night. All arrangements have been made for this all-important game and it will be do or die for the Henn squad. The game will get under way under the klieg at 8.30 and softball fans should not miss this season's classic.

All-Star Amateurs Meet at Baltimore

Baltimore, Aug. 3 — (AP) — Young athletes from the United States and Canada begin their 3-day series at Baltimore Municipal Stadium tonight in the first international amateur all-star baseball series and a flock of major league scouts is expected to be on hand to look over the lads.

In fact, several already have been here to watch the youngsters during workouts, and coaches from Philadelphia Phillies and the Athletics will direct the Canadian and American nines on the field.

The teams will play tonight and Saturday night, with the winner meeting a star outfit drawn from 400 Baltimore sandlot teams for the championship Sunday afternoon. If the first two games are split, Canadian and American clubs will play a third tilt Sunday to determine the finalist which will oppose Baltimore.

Jack Coombs and Ira Thomas, Athletics' coaches, will direct the United States players, and Cy Morgan, Phillies scout, the Canadians. Others expected to aid, and incidentally look over prospects for business, included John McCorry, New York Yankees, and Pack Ward, Boston Braves.

Starting hurlers will be Frank Womack, Hamilton, Ont., southpaw, and righthander Glen Spencer, Hamilton, Ont., who undefeated this year. Tom Pearson, of Niagara Falls, Ont., drew the right field assignment on the starting lineup for the Canadian boy-wonders.

Howie Fox Pitching Great Ball for Syracuse Chiefs at Present Time

(By The Associated Press)

Howie Fox of Syracuse Chiefs is pitching the kind of ball in the International League that should assure his graduation to Cincinnati Reds at the end of the season.

With 13 victories to his credit and four shutouts, the 26-year-old righthander is tabbed as one of the brightest pitching prospects in the circuit. He may have been rushed into the big show before he was ready in earlier trials but his International record proves that he now has the stuff.

Defeated in his last two starts, Fox got back in the win path last night with a 3-2 win over Buffalo, limiting the herd to four hits.

Syracuse ran into trouble at Rochester where Ray Yochim tossed a nest five-hitter for the Red Wings to blank the Little Chiefs, 3-0.

Montreal nosed out Baltimore, 4-3, as Chet Kehn came on to save the game for Red Davis whose early 4-0 lead had melted during a three-run Baltimore sixth inning spurt.

All the Montreal runs were scored off Bob Kuzava, the first of six Baltimore pitchers, in the fourth inning. Kuzava was hit twice in the shins during the barrage.

Toronto tripped Newark Bears, 3-1, behind Jim Konstanty's pitching with the help of homers by Jack Knickerbocker and Goody Rosen. Jack Phillips hit the circuit for the Bears in the first, one of the six hits off Konstanty who registered his ninth triumph.

When will Toronto enjoy a Television Broadcast of a world's championship - long-distance swim?

Brooklyn's Dodgers Stagger Home With Lead Slashed To Four Games by the Cards

Bank on .700 Winning Record at Ebbetts Field to Halt Toboggan Slide

By JACK HAND

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Brooklyn's weary Dodgers, their 10-game National League lead sliced to four by a series of Cincinnati Chiefs and Boston, staggered home today, banking on a .700 winning record at Ebbets Field to halt their toboggan slide.

If the Series talk has evaporated and the question of the day is "Catfish, to what's the matter with the Dodgers?" The fellow who knows the answer could command a princely salary from President Branch Rickey.

Red Barrett tripped the Dodgers yesterday, throwing a three-hitter and doing in Bert Shotton's winning rally in a 3-1 triumph. The Dodgers' Harry Taylor came up with a well-pitched ball game but not good enough.

The Giants whipped the injury-riddled Phillies for a third straight 5-4 victory. For the second day in a row there were no Giants homers. Oscar Judd of Ingersoll, Ont, and Al Jurisich yielded only four hits but a pair of wild pitches and an error by Jim Tabor made Johnny Schmitz the loser.

Enos Slaughter led the blazing Cardinals with a pair of singles and a triple, driving in three runs in a 9-2 romp over Cincinnati's Kent Peterson.

Outfielder Injured

The Reds lost more than the ball game because their ace rookie outfielder, Frank Baumholtz, suffered a slight concussion in a collision with shortstop Eddie Miller while chasing a Texas leaguer. Miller received a cut chin.

Kirby Higbe lived up to his high price tag by hurling a seven-hit 3-0 shutout for Pittsburgh against Chicago. Ralph Kiner, with his 28th homer in the second inning started Hank Borowy on the way to his sixth loss.

Boston Red Sox, who opened a last-fifth stand tonight against New York Yankees, warmed up with a 12-2 slaughter of Washington. While Oenny Galehouse retired the first 17 men to face him in a neat six-hit effort the Sox lambasted Early Wynn, Marino Pieretti and Scott Carp for 15 hits including Ted Williams' 25th homer.

Only 596 cash customers braved 96-degree heat to watch St. Louis Browns toss another one, this time to Chicago 8-4. Red Embree got credit for his 9th win against 12 losses.

Ted Wilks, Cardinal relief ace, was credited with a save as the White Sox' Ralph Hodgin collected a single, double and 4th first home run of the year.

The scheduled Cleveland-at-Detroit game was rained out and the other clubs were not scheduled.

ROCHESTER BOAT EASILY DEFEATS CANADA ENTRIES

In Light Wind Circe Wins by Ten Minutes Over Aphrodite and Question Mark

Rochester, N.Y., Aug. 8—(CP)—Nicelies of nautical strategy were displayed as two Toronto skippers, Robert B. F. (Bobby) Barr and J. A. Simmons, laid plans to gain points in George Cup racing with John Odenbach Jr., skipper of Circe, which flies the Rochester Yacht Club burgee.

Odenbach and Circe yesterday made a runaway of the opening race of the three-race series, the R.Y.C. defender scudding home 10 minutes ahead of Barr and his Aphrodite of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club. Brown-hulled Circe held an 11-minute, 16-second advantage on the elapsed time skippers, were hopeful that a change of weather today would put them back in contention for the Silas George silverware, now emblematic of Lake Ontario six-metre supremacy.

On the basis of a point for each race finished and another for each yacht beaten, defending Circe leads with three, Aphrodite boasts two and Question Mark one. Elapsed finish times in yesterday's inaugural were 3:18:50, 3:28:30 and 3:30:16 in the same order.

Conditions more to the liking of Question Mark and Aphrodite are widely cited give Barr and Simmons opportunity to trim the youthful Odenbach, keeping the issue of cup possession open until the final race.

Manoeuvring of all three skippers is being observed with interest particularly by the veteran Barrows, responsible for reviving the classic, and Howard Killgour, R.C.C. grand-slam winner a year ago.

Schumacher, Aug. 8 (CP) — Visitors to this northern Ontario mining community rubbed their eyes yesterday when Barbara Scott, Canada's world figure-skating champion walked down the main street in full skating costumes with the temperature hovering in the 90s. But townspeople didn't give her a second glance. Barbara is only one of 130 skaters—nearly half of them from the United States—now on hand to begin tiptoeing along the sidewalks with their blades on almost any hot day. They're all heading for the same place, the celebrated Lakeshore Mine's summer figure-skating school.

Yvonne Sherman of New York, United States Junior Ladies Champion and judged by many to be Barbara Ann's closest rival for the Olympic crown, is also attending the school, while Nikolova Jerina of Czechoslovakia, who placed sixth in the world's championship at Stockholm last winter, is due to arrive today.

It may be a little warm for skating, but—believe it or not—these Olympic aspirants are practicing nine hours a day.

Detroit, Aug. 8 — (AP) — The State of Michigan, slow on the uptake as Detroit's suburban trotting track boomed, within two years to become the second busiest night harness racing plant in the country, drew a total operating fee of only $3,850 for the half-mile oval in 1946 but already has extracted nearly $60,000 from the first two weeks of its 42-night activity there this summer.

For the first 15 nights of the current stand nearly 100,000 customers spent almost $3,800,000 through the machines.

At the close of the 1942 football season two of University of Michigan's brightest stars, halfback Tom Kuzma and guard Julius Franks, entered University hospital for treatment of what soon was diagnosed as sarcoma. Two long years in hospital and four more of steady recuperating outside have put both the Wolverine stars back in the game. Kuzma is the new freshman grid coach under Jim Yeager at the University of Colorado. Franks enters Michigan's graduate school to study clinical psychology this fall.

University of Michigan, University of Detroit and Michigan State will be playing their football for the home folks this fall, with 19 of their combined schedule of 28 games slated for one of the three campuses. Those which claimed the title of the "travelling-est" team of 1946, in at home seven weekends of the Tiger's 10-game schedule and the Wolverines and Spartans step outside the state only three times each in nine-game slates.

Dust by Destiny

On a recent road trip Detroit Tigers trooped out of their hotel and barged into taxis en route to the ball park.

"Who has all those fellows?" a sidewalk banger-on asked.

"That's the Detroit baseball club," someone in the know replied.

"Where are they going?"

The answer was ready-made: "With the Yanks in the same league, nowhere!"

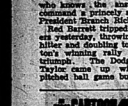
Toronto, Aug. 8 — (CP) — Only a bored person after the McGill Athletic report and sundry other blasts concerning professionalism, athletic scholarships and the current rate of the Chinese dollar has preserved education minded athletes, Harry (London Free Press) Sims has delivered a practical solution to Athletic woes.

In so far as hockey players are concerned the path to knowledge in return for athletic ability is unobstructed, Sims declares, now that members of the British Ice Hockey Association are only too willing to present young, fast-skating hockey playing students with tuition, books and Sterling in return for their services on British ice and Sims doesn't mean delivering it.

In an interview with Major Richard H. Stapleford of Watford, Ont., who is an Ontario Government official in England and manager of the Streatham Hockey Club in the B.I.H.A., Sims said, "If you want to go to university, Stapleford's club will pay your way from books to beans."

Sims also discloses that the minimum wage in the British League is $40 weekly while topnotchers drawing $60 plus bonuses for wins and ties.



The British League also carries insurance for players, provides passage back and forth and medication and supplies toothpaste.

Was That Right Mr. Sims?

Reviewing the recent Guelph Marathon in that city's Mercury, Sports Writer Rex MacLeod points out that the competitors thought the 26-mile course a little rugged on such a warm day. MacLeod says that when the boys who run on and on and on, complain about a course, then the heat is deserved since no hardier specy of athlete exists than the Marathon tradgers.

MacLeod said: "One exhausted plodder was heard to mutter, 'the guy who planned this course must've thought we were looking for the Commandos, not the Olympics.'"

Even winner Ab Morton, a veteran distance runner, complained about the hill-and-dale nature of the course reports MacLeod, but the credible Morton with the following platitude, toughest marathon in my life."

CHAPTER 1

She told herself it was silly to be scared just because Mona was late, but she pressed her nose against the cold glass and started out through the sycamore trees and the rain.

The street car stopped at the corner.

Its windows made nice squares of yellow light, and against them Sherry could see the two people who got off—a man and a woman. She left a little flutter of expectancy and held her breath, but the woman waited for the car to pass and crossed the street.

Sherry had been kneeling on the davenport. She slid down with a despondent thump and then remembered that the springs were precarious. She eased her feet to the floor and sat staring at the pleasant room.

Suppose "anything" had happened to Mona!

But even in her small moment of anxiety the room comforted her. She had cleaned it that morning—their whole tiny house for that matter—and it was nice the way the polished furniture gleamed, she thought and by the firelight and shaded lamps you couldn't see that the rug was worn nor that things didn't match. She looked around with a soothing sense of pride.

This was her house! Her very first home of her own to care for as she chose. Would she ever forget that day two weeks ago when she had found the little cottage among the trees with a For Rent sign on it? Not an apartment but a real entire house, with a front door and a back door and a fireplace. That there were seven other identical ones burrowing back into the hill had not mattered.

She had been excited and a little out of breath when she knocked on the manager's door.

The woman had said, "Oh, two girls," in a tone that made Sherry feel that they shouldn't be. "Do you have much company?"

Sherry had said, "Oh, no," but had not added that that was because they did not know anybody—yet. "But we have a cat."

The manager had said, "That's all right," very unexpectedly. "The boys at the end have three and a dog."

Sherry loved the boys at the end.

She had told Mona about it that night in their one room and kitchenette with maid service. Mona had studied a long scarlet and glamorously kept fingernail and said, "Oh, a bungalow court."

Sherry had said, "But it isn't like that at all! You'd hardly notice the other houses through the trees. It's just like—well, sort of like a fairy-tale village!"

Then she told her about how you stepped off the street and all of a sudden you were in an ancient garden, and Mona had reminded Sherry about the ancient part when she saw the plumbing. But she had been sweet about the long ride almost to the end of the car line every night, and Sherry did not mind the walk to the grocer's.

In the end they took it.

Sherry had written home for some of her own things, and when they came she had spent an exhausting but glorious day moving all the furniture around and trying different effects. She had hung pictures and wired lamps and hemmed curtains, and that night, after a hastily get together dinner before the fire, Mona had reluctantly admitted that while the house was not exactly her sleek, sophisticated type, it was cozy.

Sherry had called it "Hidden House" from a book she had read once, and the two had settled down to normal routine.

Mona had a job in an insurance office so she left early every morning, and she did not eat any breakfast because it took thought to maintain her pantherish litheness. So Sherry slept late, rushed or dawdled through her chores as the mood moved her, read, wrote or just dreamed stories as she chose. As long as she had her tiny allowance from home it was pleasantly easy to put off the looking for a job day. Sometimes she had felt a little shiftless and guilty about it but tonight she sat and watched the fire and was glad she had waited.

They had not bought any logs, yet, and she was burning pieces of boxes she had broken up outside the kitchen door. They made nice kindling for a neat pile of manuscripts.

Sherry watched them burn with pleasant satisfaction. Thy were not worthy of her. It was funny what you had thought was good when you were very young. Besides, the trunk the stories had lived in could be used to better advantage when the house was so chary of closet space. And now that she had decided this morning that she was going to write—really work at it instead of just tossing off the little things that came to her—what was the use of keeping material that she wouldn't have a soul see anyway?

Another street car rumbled up the street and Sherry flew to the window. What would she do if Mona wasn't on it? Her panic surprised her. Mona must be on this one! But before the street car came in sight a Cadillac roadster stopped at the entrance to the court. It was glistening with rain and the twin windshield wipers were working systematically.

By the light of a street lamp Sherry could see Mona get out. She thanked the man at the wheel with gracious coolness and started toward the house.

Sherry ran to the door and held it open.

She said, "I've been worried to death, darling! I couldn't put the chops on till you came or they'd have been done to a frazzle."

Mona slipped off her wet coat.

She said, "Well, put them on now, honey. I had a cocktail and I'm starved!"

Her eyes sparkled and her cheeks were flushed. She went into the bedroom.

"Will you rush them?" she wanted to know. "George Brothers brought me home. I'll tell you all about it while we eat."

Sherry went into the kitchen and put the chops on the broiler. The table in the breakfast nook was set and the vegetables only needed heating up. She took the salads out of the icebox and put them on the table, but all the while she was thinking of George Brothers.

She had seen him once when she had met Mona downtown for lunch. He was the head of the insurance company for which Mona worked. He looked well fed and comfortable, and his hair was thinning on top. He seemed like a nice,pleasant person all right, but not the sort of man to cause such a triumphant glow.

When their meal was almost over Sherry understood.

She could always see the other person's point of view, so clearly sometimes that she lost her own. So she understood Mona's elation when, out of one hundred and thirty-seven girls, George Brothers had taken her home.

As Mona talked, the uninteresting man became as important to Sherry as he was to Mona and the other hundred and thirty-six. She could see them there in the huge room with row after row of desks. Some of them were old, the ones that had been dependably there for years and got bonuses. Mona had been there only six months and her desk was third from the end near the entrance to George Brothers' private office.

Sherry could see her, sleek and efficient, handling papers with her slim, manicured hands. George Brothers had seen her there two months ago for the first time. He had said, "Good morning," and heads had turned from the nearest desks.

Then they had met in the elevator once and exchanged the time of day. Sherry imagined the man's surprise at Mona's throaty, cultured voice and precocious poise. Tonight they had met outside the building, and safely away from interested eyes, he had offered to drive her home.

Mona was saying, And you remember that cocktail lounge at the Biltmore, the one we walked through that day? Well, we went there. Little bowls of olives and peanuts on all the tables and, honey, a girl at the bar with my new blue velvet exactly! Only hers was the real thing. And a square-cut emerald an inch long!" She fingered her own enormous jade.

"I couldn't phone you. I didn't want to give the impression there were any strings to me. He's too cagey to go for that sort of thing."

Sherry did not like the implication.

"But—he's married, isn't he" she wanted to know.

Mona laughed her low, rippling laugh.

She said, "People's lives aren't just all over the minute they marry, darling."

Sherry hated Mona to laugh at her. She hated disagreeing with her. It seemed to put a distance between them, to close out their closeness. But this was important: There were things she had to say! She decided to wait until later.

After dishes they sat in front of the fire and Mona lighted a cigaret.

Sherry darned their stockings and talked about the little things that had happened during the day. How the gardener at the big house up the hill had turned the hose on Whiskers, the cat, to chase her away from the fish pond. How the butcher had bought a new house in the canyon and had a bear for a pet.

Suddenly she put down the darning basket.

She said, "Do you know what I decided today?"

Mona said, "No, darling. What?"

She turned from the fire and there was a little satisfied smile around her lips. Sherry leaned forward eagerly.

"Mona, I'm going to write! Really work at it and do something important. Maybe even classic! I'm sure I can!"

Mona said, "Of course you can. You write beautifully."

She turned back to the fire, and after a while she threw her cigaret in it and rose languorously.

She said, "I think I'll put my new linen collar and cuffs on the henna wool."

Sherry was surprised.

"But I just put the pique ones back on," she told her.

Mona thanked her but thought she would change them, and went into the bedroom.

Sherry sat and stared at the fire.

She felt she ought to offer to change the collar and cuffs. She did all their sewing... After all, Mona worked all day. But the new linen set was for George Brothers. She felt vaguely resentful. She had laundered the pique ones beautifully.

So Mona had not been able to call her because of the impression it would make on George Brothers! What had Mona been thinking when she was smiling that secretive little smile into the fire? Surely, she wouldn't—

Whiskers jumped down from the chair and stretched. She went to the door and meowed.

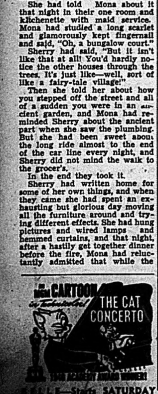
Sherry said, "I think it's still raining, putsy," but she opened the door, and Whiskers meandered lazily out and sat on the dry top step.

Sherry went into the bedroom where Mona had the dress laid out on the bed.

She said, "Let me do it, darling."

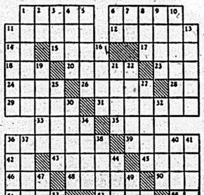
The heavy clunk of the knocker surprised them both. Sherry closed the bedroom door and opened the front one. The young man who stood on the steps wore a scarlet sweater, and there were glistening drops of rain on his dark curls. From his superior height he regarded Sherry gravely.

He said, "I beg your pardon, of course. You have an onion?"



Sherry said, "I think so."

The young man smiled happily. "Then we may borrow it?" he wanted to know. "But you see we have a lovely stew, it needs only an onion." His smile faded. "We have no onion."



Sherry understood.

She said, "Of course. Will you—won't you come in?"

Story of Devoted Love Revealed In Court Case

Richmond, Va., Aug. 3 (AP)—Valentine Bowrne Lawless, a young Norfolk soldier who died in Europe in 1944, wanted just one thing after his death—a "perfect rose" to be sent to his sweetheart each Saturday morning.

She was not to know whence came the roses, which Lawless wanted sent "only because I have wanted so much to give her some pleasure while I lived...."

The story of Lawless 'love and the "one perfect rose" came to light in a case which the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals has agreed to review.

Young Lawless, in his will written Nov. 13, 1941, directed the disposition of certain personal possessions that his boat and automobile be sold and the proceeds, together with insurance, be turned over to his brother, Kirwan Lawless to be applied "on a special purpose."

The will failed to state this purpose but on the same day Lawless wrote a personal letter to his brother requesting Kirwan to take "whatever cash, no matter how much is left over after my death and funeral and marker, and make a contract with a florist, to send one rose each Saturday morning before 10 a.m., for the residence of a girl I have loved very dearly for over three years at this writing, and shall continue to love for the duration of my life."

The young soldier left an estate amounting to more than $5,600. In a case in the Norfolk court of law and chancery, Kirwan, named executor, held that the will required that all funds left by Valentine be turned over to him. A sister held it was not practical or proper that the directions in the letter be carried out.

The lower court upheld Kirwan's contention. However, when entered a decree turning over to him "individually and with no trust attached all funds left by his brother."

Saves Life of Grandchild—Frederick G. Wood, Mimico insurance agent, is seen holding his 2½-year-old granddaughter, Barbara Pearson, whom he rescued when he discovered the child floating unconscious in the waters of Nottawasaga Bay. Wood was unaware the girl was his own granddaughter until he had made the rescue.

Body of Child Found in Surf

Falmouth, Mass., Aug. 3—(AP) — The body of four-year-old Nancy Perini, niece of Lou Perini president and part owner of the Boston Braves baseball team, missing since yesterday, was found today in the surf of a beach in front of the family summer home.

The body was found by police dragging about 20 feet from shore. They said the child apparently was drowned accidentally. Earlier District Attorney Frank E. Smith had begun probing the possibility that the child had been kidnapped. Falmouth police, however, sticking to their theory that the tot had drowned, continued their dragging operations until they hooked the body.

Smith earlier said he had received a report that a child in the family home had warned the little girl and a sister to remain away from a man and woman in an automobile who had appeared to be "unduly friendly" with the children.

Picton Fire Destroys VanDusen Home In Athol Twp.

Picton, Aug. 3 — Fire completely destroyed the home of Jack VanDusen in Athol Township late yesterday afternoon. A coal oil stove exploded when it was being lighted by Portia VanDusen. The house was soon a mass of flames and all the contents were lost. The girl escaped injury. Mrs. VanDusen had gone for the cows at the time and Mr. VanDusen was working in the fields. By the time they could reach the house it was impossible to get inside. Neighbors were soon on the scene and prevented the flames from spreading to buildings near by. The community is planning to hold a shower to help the family, which includes five children.

Program Under Way.

A paving program is under way on Highway 41, which, when completed, will see a provincial highway from Picton to Cole's Ferry, near Green Point. The H. J. McFarland Co. has the contract and will grade and pave a six-mile section this summer. Two miles were graded and paved last year. This is the first section of the road directly east of Picton, and following the road around the high shore which overlooks the Bay of Quinte. It is possible that there may be a bridge or ferry at some point to make a short cut to Napanee, but this has not yet been announced.

The McFarland Co. has also been given a contract for the grading and paving of sixteen miles of provincial highway north of Napanee, in the Kaladar district.

Playdowns Arranged.

Jewels Belonging To Kaiser's Widow Vanish in Berlin

$500,000 Worth Hidden In Trunk in American Sector

By RICHARD KASISCHKE

Berlin, Aug. 9 (AP) — United States criminal investigation agents disclosed today they were hunting $500,000 worth of jewels belonging to the late widow of Kaiser Wilhelm II, which her son said vanished last June from a trunk in which he had them hidden in the Amreican sector of Berlin.

The agents said the owner of the gems, Princess Hermine Von Schoenaich-Carolath, who died Thursday at Frankfurt-An-Der-Oder in the Russian zone, had spirited 95 pieces of jewelry worth an estimated $1,000,000 to her son, Prince Ferdinand, in the United States zone.

They said a young German woman friend of the Prince "risked her neck" to smuggle the collection out of the Russian zone in a valise to Ferdinand, who was to convert the valuables into cash for investment in hotel and other interests in western Germany.

Investigators, attempting to unravel the mystery, have encountered a maze of intrigue involving fortune tellers, characters from the Berlin underworld and persons of half a dozen nationalities, including an unidentified American civilian in whose house Ferdinand—with his "million dollar trunk"—was a guest for a short period.

Highlights of Story

Here are the highlights of the story, as related by the army agents:

The 34-year-old Ferdinand, who resided part-time in the United States sector of Berlin, came to the attention of police earlier this year when it became known he had sold a necklace worth 1,200,000 reichsmarks ($120,000 at the military rate of exchange.)

This necklace, investigators were told, had been brought to him from his mother by the woman emissary.

During June, the young woman told authorities, she made another trip to Frankfurt to visit Hermine. This time she said she brought back the valise filled with jewels which she took to Ferdinand.

Ferdinand, she said, placed the gems in a large trunk given him by his American friend.

Tied to String

"He locked the trunk," she said, "and made certain that he always carried on his person the two keys that fit the lock. They were tied on a single string."

Shortly after this, investigators said, the Prince thought he was being shadowed by Russian agents. To throw them off the track he decided to change his residence frequently by making short visits with friends. Wherever he went he carried the treasure-laden trunk.

RAPIDS PRINCE WENT THRU RAPIDS WITHOUT RUDDER

Carried Stern-First for Six Miles Through Dangerous Water of St. Lawrence R.

Kingston, Aug. 9 (CP).—How the St. Lawrence steamship Rapids Prince was carried stern-first without rudder for six miles through dangerous rapids until she reached quiet waters near Morrisburg was told by Capt. P. J. Cherry of Kingston when the ship was put into drydock here last night.

First reports of the mishap to the Rapids Prince were that she had run aground. But Captain Cherry explained that the rudder stock which controls the rudder broke about 11 p.m. Wednesday when the ship was in the middle of the rapids about six miles west of Morrisburg.

With fourteen passengers and crew aboard, the crippled craft was controlled by her twin propellers as she careened backwards down the river in a six-mile run through dangerous eddies between sharp, jagged rocks. It was a miraculous escape from disaster.

"The river would not be more than a quarter-mile wide at any point, and we were going from 20 to 25 miles an hour until we reached quiet water near Morrisburg," said Capt. Cherry.

"By standing on the stern and yelling orders to the chief engineer we were able to steer the ship after a fashion."

At times they were so close to shore that branches from overhanging limbs of trees were torn off and carried away on the ship. Some were caught in open windows at the side.

The chief problem was to control the bow, and this was easier to do when the vessel was drifting back down the river. It would have been impossible to control the ship going ahead.

The 14 passengers were taken off at Morrisburg, yesterday.

In the six miles that the ship covered backwards there is a drop in the river of about 22 feet.

The rudder stock is a steel shaft about 24 feet long and six inches in diameter directly attached to the rudder. Temporary repairs were made Thursday at Morrisburg and the ship came to Kingston under her own power and using her rudder. Two tugs from Kingston accompanied her from Morrisburg until she entered dry dock here, after half an hour's manoeuvring.

To replace the rudder stock a piece of raw material was brought from Montreal and was machined here, 40 men working on the repair job through the night.

Now that she's in dry dock the Rapids Prince will be inspected for further damage but Capt. Cherry does not believe there is any since the hull did not touch. She is expected to be back in service in a day or two.

Capt. Cherry has skippered the Rapids Prince for 20 years.

CHARGED WITH MURDER

Martinsville, Va., Aug. 9 —(AP) —A restaurant patron finished his sapdwich, rose from his seat and remarked to no one in particular: "Now's as good a time as any." Then he whipped out an automatic pistol and shot 25-year-old Mrs. Olean Benson dead before the horrified gaze of 30 diners in the midtown establishment. Police said he was booked as Will Shumate, 41, a taxi-driver, and charged with murder.

ODOM IS PAST CALCUTTA ON WAY AROUND WORLD

Lone Flier Better Than Halfway Along His Intended 19,600-Mile Course

Calcutta, Aug. 9 — (AP) — William P. Odom, on a round-the-world flight for a new solo record, landed his two-engine Bombshell here at 12:10 p. m. (2:10 a.m. EDT), today and left for Shanghai an hour and 34 minutes later.

The flier, getting down from his plane with a smile at Dum Dum airport, said he had had good weather on the flight of some 1,400 miles across India from Karachi.

When he left at 1:44 p. m. (3:44 a. m. EDT) he was 37 hours and 51 minutes and more than 10,000 miles out of Chicago — better than halfway along his intended 19,600-mile course.

He had averaged roughly 280 miles an hour, including time on the ground.

Odom landed at Karachi at 5:35 a. m. local time (8:05 p. m. Friday, EDT) and took off after checking the weather and refuelling.

The 27-year-old pilot was out to beat the time of Wiley Post, who soloed around the world in 1933 in 186 hours.

He was flying the same converted A26 bomber in which he, penmaker Milton Reynolds and T. Carril Sallee girdled the globe last April in 78 hours and 55½ minutes.

On this solo flight, Odom left Chicago at 12:35 p.m. EDT Thursday and stopped at Gander, Nfld., Paris and Cairo before he hit Karachi. He flew from Cairo to Karachi, approximately 2,220 miles in eight hours and 21 minutes.

His flight is taking him over some of the territory he covered as a wartime pilot over the Atlantic for the R.A.F. ferry command and over the Himalayas "hump" for Chinese National Airways.

Mariners' Emporium Has New Owner After 30 Years

Halifax, Aug. 9 —(CP)— Youthful Ian MacDonald was hoping to fill a big pair of shoes today as he took over a Halifax waterfront store which for 30 years has advertised its wares as "everything from a needle to an anchor." His predecessor and founder of the Mariners' Emporium, E. Bert Batson, recently sold out the business — lock stock and bed warmer.

Purchased by MacDonald's father, the store has been selling such random items as harpoon guns, tractor treads, locomotive wheels, boilers, binnacles and running lights, and making a scintillating as well as profitable living for its owner.

Bert was born in Portsmouth, Eng., and came to Halifax 40 years ago. Since then "I've dealt in everything," he says. The old timers who idle away their free hours at the store chuckle when they recall Bert's answer to a wag asking for a second-hand coffin.

"I don't have one, but I can let you have a new coffin for a second-hand price," was his classic reply.

He is retiring from his unofficial museum because of failing health. He hopes to be able to go to Australia soon for an extended trip.

Under the management of tall, sandy-haired MacDonald, the store will continue to be known by its original and unassuming name — Bert Batson's.

The genial smile of the legendary Mr. Batson will be the only familiar sight (outside of Bert himself) missing from the lower Water Street landmark. But if a customer requires a cannon from an old French man-o'-war, or the blue-printed locations of every ship which has sunk off Sable Island during the last three centuries, he can still find it at Bert Batson's.

DROWNS IN DEEP WATER

Oshawa, Aug. 9 — (CP). — A non-swimmer, Miss Marie Scott, 30, of Fitzroy Harbor near Arnprior, Ont., was drowned late last night when she got into deep water in the Rouge River 15 miles east of Toronto while bathing with two companions.

The body was recovered by dragging operations but artificial respiration failed to revive the girl.

Hot Weather Spell Aids Farmers in Recovery From Seeding Setbacks

(By The Canadian Press)

The heat wave which gripped Ontario for a week was generally welcomed by farmers as ideal for hay and wheat crops retarted at seeding time by prolonged spring rains and then by floods.

While the heat discomfitted urban dwellers, forced closing of some industries and baked northern bushlands tinder-dry with a high fire hazard, it was appreciated by the farmers. A Canadian Press survey today showed no apprehension was felt that it might bring about drought conditions. Farmers around St. Catharines recalled that six rainless weeks had preceded a bumper fruit crop last summer.

North Bay, Peterboro and centres in southwestern Ontario report haying all but completed with corn, wheat and other grains maturing rapidly. Many farmers in the Niagara fruit belt, where ripening of peaches and other fruit crops has been speeded, said the weather was "perfect" but suggested that the past week's heat might prematurely ripen later fruits and vegetables.

From Galt came news that the ground in that area is "bone dry" and rain is needed for root crops, but only in the counties of Kent and Essex — noted for tobacco and tomato crops which require plenty of rain — was serious concern expressed over continuing dry weather.

Not Needed for Week

In Peterborough, which recorded 12 rainless days, Frank C. Paterson, provincial agricultural representative, commented that rain "wouldn't really be needed for at least a week from now." He reported that several farmers in that district had suffered heat prostration in the fields.

Most Ontario workers, both on farms and in offices and factories, kept working right through the hottest days when temperatures climbed well into the 90s, but a number of stoppages from heat occurred.

Workers in five Guelph industries knocked off Thursday afternoon when heat and humidity soared. At Woodstock the moulding foundry of a machine company shut down for two days. Absenteeism in mines in the Timmins area increased due to the heat, and the breaking point was reached in several plants.

Many centres reported that the number of layoffs might have been higher if a larger number of factories in Southern Ontario had not been closed for vacations when the heat wave struck.

Man Serving Prison Term Charged with Sex-Slaying Two Children at Winnipeg

Winnipeg, Aug. 9 — (CP) — Chief Constable Charles MacIver said today Michael Angelo Vescio, 22, of Port Arthur, had been charged with murder in the sex-slaying of two 13-year-old Winnipeg boys, Roy McGregor and George Smith, whose killings terrorized the city in January and September, 1946.

Vescio was brought here from Stony Mountain penitentiary, where he had begun serving a three-year sentence for armed robbery at the lakehead.

Chief MacIver declined to reveal the basis of the charges against Vescio. The laying of charges against him concluded one chapter of a search which began Jan. 4, 1946, when McGregor's body was found in a lumber yard in the Fort Rouge district with three bullet wounds in his body.

The body of George Smith, with three bullet wounds, was found in a west-central Winnipeg lane the following September.

The twin slayings terrorized Winnipeg parents and children who normally played on the streets during the evenings scurried home from school promptly at 4 p. m. and never left the vicinity of their yards until they went to school in the morning.

Co-operate in Campaign

So thoroughly did parents indoctrinate the need of caution into their children that even old family friends were looked askance at by the youngsters. Co-operating in the campaign to safeguard the children, high school rugby officials switched intercollegiate games from the floodlight hours to daylight, in order that the players and fans might reach home before darkness fell over this frightened city.

Even after the first hue and cry died down, citizens maintained vigilence and yesterday's report that police had the suspected slayer in custody caused a sigh of relief throughout the city.

The story of the suspect's detention was related by the Free Press, which said that while police maintained official silence on the case highly-confidential sources had indicated that sensational developments could be expected.

Within the last month several criminal attacks on youngsters have been reported. And according to the Free Press, police have absolved the alleged slayer of any complicity in these recent attacks.

MOSLEM-SIKH RIOT OVER PARTITION TAKES 120 LIVES

Hundreds Are Injured in Amritsar District Alona During Past Week

New Delhi, Aug. 9 (AP).—Military reinforcements sped into the troubled Punjab today where Moslem-Sikh rioting over impending partition of the province has killed 120 persons and injured hundreds in Amgitsar district alone this week.

Communal differences over partitioning the Punjab between Moslem Pakistan and the predominantly Hindu Indian Union has been particularly bitter in the region of Amritsar, one of the Sikh holy cities.

The Sikhs oppose partition, which they believe will leave many of their group a weak minority in the new Moslem state.

New ork, Aug. 9 (CP).—The
New York, Aug. 9 (CP).—The dispatch from New Delhi that the famous Gurkha troops will be split between Britain and the Dominion of India in the division of India attendant upon partition.

Though not officially stated, it is understood, the Times said, that the tough little Gurkhas who are Hindu by religion, preferred not to serve in the predominantly Moslem dominion of Pakistan.

Gurkha battalions now in Pakistan will be moved to India and those overseas will remain under their supreme commander, Field Marshal Sir Claude J. E. Auchinleck, who temporarily heads the forces of both dominions.

Supreme Court Has No Power To Hear Appeal

Ottawa, Aug. 9 (CP).—Hearing of a Crown application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against the acquittal of Mrs. Evelyn Dick in the torso slaying of her husband in Hamilton in March 1946, ended abruptly today when her lawyer J. J. Robinette argued successfully that the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

As the hearing in chambers before Mr. Justice J. W. Estey of the Supreme Court entered its second day. Mr. Robinette read Section 1025 of the Criminal Code which outlines the jurisdiction of courts. He said that the section clearly stated the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction to hear appeals in cases confirming or setting aside an acquittal.

The court's jurisdiction was limited to hearing appeals in cases confirming or setting aside convictions.

Mr. Justice Estey said he agreed the section appeared to make it clear that he had no jurisdiction to hear the application.

W. B. Common, K. C., and W. M. Martin, K. C., representing the Attorney-General's Department, agreed as well after confirming that no recent amendments had been made to the pertinent section of the Criminal Code.

As Mr. Justice Estey rose from his seat to mark the end of the hearing, Mr. Robinette smilingly said:

"That ends the case of the King versus Mrs. Dick for which I am very thankful."

ECONOMIC CRISIS BROUGHT HOME TO BRITISH PEOPLE

Hollywood Movies Are Banned in Britain Due To New Import Tax Imposed

London, Aug. 9 —(AP)— Britain's economic crisis was brought home sharply to the ordinary man and woman today with news that they no longer could seek escape from their troubles in Hollywood movies.

The United States motion picture industry, by vote of directors of the Motion Picture Export Association in New York, yesterday slapped an immediate ban on American film shipments to England because of a new British import tax expected to take 75 per cent of the earnings of American films in the United Kingdom.

This tax was part of a drive to save Britain's borrowed dollars, badly needed to buy food and raw materials abroad, and build up her exports to get more dollars.

In another phase of the same campaign, the Government yesterday pushed through the House of Commons on vital second reading an emergency bill to broaden Government powers over labor and management. The vote was not recorded.

House Rejects Motion.

The House voted down 251 to 148, a motion to reject the bill. Winston Churchill, wartime Conservative prime minister who made the motion, called the measure a "blank cheque for totalitarian government."

Still before the House for debate Monday were eight Churchill amendments to remove the key clause in the bill and limit the Government's authority. Parliament expected to complete action on the measure next Wednesday.

Some Britons already short on food, beer and other consumers' goods, were irate to hear that they were to be deprived altogether of Hollywood films.

The Last Straw.

"This is the last straw!" said an electrical engineer's wife. "Going to the films is the only recreation I have and if they take away American films . . . well, I'm patriotic and all that, but there's nobody like Clarke Gable in British pictures."

On the other hand, some critics, who accuse Hollywood of "slickness," and some parents and teachers, who charge United States films with promoting juvenile delinquency and poor English, were happy over the ban.

Theatre managers said hundreds of showhouses might have to close for want of pictures. British theatres now fill about 80 per cent of their playing time with foreign films, mostly from the United States. The British film industry seems unlikely to fill the threatened deficit of movies.

Three Killed In Plane Crash

New York, Aug. 9 —(AP)— A two-engined American Airlines radar experimental craft plunged into the East River off La Guardia Field last night and three of five airline personnel aboard were presumed to have perished.

The plane, a type used in commercial passenger service but carrying only airline personnel, was just taking off for Buffalo, N.Y., on a trip to experiment with radar, when the crash occurred.

An airline spokesman said one of the two engines failed on the takeoff and that the pilot, Capt. Walter A. Davidson, apparently attempted to land but overshot the field.

One of the two survivors, James Till, 28, a mechanic, managed to thrust open the side door of the ship and free himself and another mechanic. The three other members of the crew, he said, were imprisoned in the wreckage.

Till was not injured and the other survivor was carried away from the shore on a stretcher although his injuries were said to be not serious.

Weather Synopsis

Toronto, Aug. 9—(CP)—Over northern Ontario this morning skies are clear. Considerable cloudiness prevailed in southern districts during the night and should persist on Saturday. A disturbance to the west of Lake Superior is moving slowly eastward and will cause scattered thundershowers in the White River region this evening and in the lower lake regions on Sunday evening.

60 Farmhouses, Summer Homes Lie in Fire's Path

Woodland Conflagrations In Cape Breton are Unhalted

(By The Canadian Press)

Showers early today failed to halt a forest fire burning in the Mira district of eastern Cape Breton and the flames which died down during the night were racing westward with more than 60 farmhouses and summer homes in their path.

All available volunteers, augmenting forest ranger's fire apparatus with requisitioned A. R. P. equipment, were sent to the brickyard section of Mira to stop the flames before they reached the highway between Sydney and Louisburg.

In Ontario the Ste. Marie area crown timber reserve. Heat and coming last night near Blind River on the north shore of Lake Huron and north in the vast reaches of the Mississauga crown timber reserve. Heat and lack of rain led forestry men to anticipate that the number of fires may reach 30 to 35 in the next two days.

Fire In Spruce Wood

On the west side of Cape Breton another fire in the spruce woods of Cheticamp Island sprang up later today and again was burning out of control.

The showers had little effect in the Cape Breton fires which already have burned over thousands of acres of spruce and pine-covered land and laid waste crops as well as destroying seven buildings.

Although this morning's rain drowned out three fires burning near Moncton in eastern New Brunswick weather forecasters indicated the rain would cease in Cape Breton later this afternoon.

The Mira fire, burning about 15 miles south of Glace Bay, was the most serious of a half dozen fires burning in Cape Breton Island.

Alex Ferguson, county councillor for the Mira district, said 50 bungalows and 11 farmhouses now were in the path of the flames.

More than 200 vacationists were evacuated from Mira Gut by special train yesterday as a fire which started near Catalone, three miles away, was swept across the countryside by a high wind and roared own to the shoreline. Telephone lines were cut as blazing poles fell across the highways and traffic on the Sydney and Louisburg railway was halted for a time as fire attacked the railroad ties.

Stream of Water Funnelled From River

A dense pall of smoke covered the entire areas as firefighters continued today to pour treams of water funnelled from the Mira River on the smouldering blaze. There was danger that a fresh wind might send it galloping northward again, but there was also some hope for firefighters in forecasts of showers.

Three homes and a barn were destroyed and girls and elderly women dumped water on embers that lit on the roofs of a score of other buildings. Some 1,000 acres of timber were swallowed by the flames in less than four hours.

The sky blazed over New Waterford last night as a fresh outbreak spurted from four smaller fires near the highway to Sydney and cut down two homes and several garages and barns in its fiery path. At least seven persons, including six children, were left homeless.

An elderly man, Frank Daley, was found lying outside his wide-threatened home and was taken to hospital suffering from shock. He had been partially overcome by smoke.

On the other side of Cape Breton, on Cheticamp Island, a five-days-old fire which scoured the northern section of the four-miles-long spit of land was reported under control after destroying thousands of acres of woodland. More than 200 volunteers were just keeping on even terms with another fire at Port Hood, 35 mile south of Cheticamp. It has burned over 10 square miles of timber and scrub.

Showers Forecast

There has been no rain in parched Cape Breton for three weeks, but the weatherman predictd showers today.

On the Nova Scotia mainland two fires raced out of control near the university town of Antigonish. Believed in check early Friday, they sprang to sudden life against yesterday and whipped through four miles of standing timber and demolished 105,000 feet of cut log and pulpwood. A sawmill and a few isolated farm houses were menaced. Police said the fire had resulted from a boy setting fire to a hornets' nest in a hayfield.

The situation was relatively unchanged in New Brunswick where three fires are raging near the railroad centre of Moncton, scene last year of the most disastrous blazes in the provinces history.

The worst flare-up was ten miles north of Moncton but two other fires, near the airport and the golf club, still had not been mastered.

Consternation on Both Sides Atlantic Follows Banning U.S. Films in Britain

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Consternation among both moviegoers and leaders of the film industry on both sides of the Atlantic followed in the wake of the American industry's decision yesterday to suspend immediately the export of all feature pictures and short subjects to Britain.

The ban is in retaliation for the new British tax which the industry estimates would take away 75 per cent of the earnings of American films shown in British theatres.

The suspension was announced by Eric A. Johnston, a president of the Motion Picture Association of America, after a three-hour closed meeting here of 50 leaders of the industry.

The tax was announced by Britain as a means of helping combat that country's dollar shortage, and was described by Johnston in a statement as a measure which "in effect strangles American film shipments to England."

"If the British do not want American pictures, that's one thing," Johnston said. "If they do, they shouldn't expect to get a dollar's worth of films for a quarter."

Johnston said the suspension would continue "indefinitely". Other sources said United States films had earned about $400,000,000 yearly in the British market, constituting about 80 per cent of the films shown in that country.

Of that total, $332,000,000 has remained in Britain as taxes, promotional expense and operating costs, while the remaining net earnings of about $68,000,000 have been transferred to this country.

Under the new tax, the M.P.A. estimates, only about 25 per cent of this $68,000,000 would be realized.

In London, harried theatre managers predicted that hundreds of cinema houses probably would close because of the shortage of pictures. Britain produces only 45 films a year.

Britain's big movie producers were reported fearful that a retaliatory tax might be placed on British films by the United States. Britain now has a six months' stock of American films.

New York financial circles said they could not estimate the effect of the shipment ban on the net earnings of the American film companies which derive an estimated 15 to 20 per cent of their gross film rentals from English showings.

1,000 Women from D.P. Camps To be Brought to Canada as Domestics

Ottawa, Aug. 9 (CP).—Immediate steps to bring 1,000 women to Canada from displaced persons camps in Germany as housekeeping help were announced today by the Departments of Labor and Immigration.

Declaring this action was the forerunner of a larger movement aimed at relieving the national shortage of domestic help, the announcement said the first 1,000 would go to east an "acute" scarcity of housekeeping labor in hospitals and service establishments.

"If this movement proves satisfactory," the departments declared, "further movements of women as domestics from the camps will be carried out."

The step is the implementation of an earlier government decision to check over women in Germany's displaced persons camps to see if they are suitable for, and will accept, domestic work here.

Selection terms of women representing the two departments will leave Halifax aboard the liner Aquitania tomorrow, to join department officials already in Europe.

The first selection will be based on the needs of hospitals and service establishments. In future movements, the announcement said, attention will be given to the general need for household workers throughout the country.

All the women volunteering to come to Canada will be individually examined by the selection teams and they will be chosen according to their occupational suitability and physical fitness.

Representatives of the Department of Labor now leaving for Europe are: Mrs. Florence Martel of Montreal, and Miss E. Amas of Saskatoon. Immigration will be represented by Miss C. Grant, Hulmur, Ont., Miss Daisy Lodge, Ottawa; Miss E. Appleton, Ottawa, and Mrs. Edna Whinney, M.B.E., Ottawa.

23.9 Mill Rate For Sidney Twp.

A township tax rate of 23.9 mills, plus section rates for public and separate schools was struck by the Sidney Township Council at their August meeting held on Monday. This rate will be reduced by the one mill subsidy provided by the Ontario Government for township roads.

The total township tax rate includes the county rate of 12.6 mills; township rate, 2.5 mills; township roads, 3.5 mills, less the one mill reduction as provided by the Ontario Government subsidy; relief of one half mill, Federation of Agriculture one fifth mill and public school grants 4.6 mills.

Council gave first and second reading to a by-law to construct water mains in an area adjacent to the city of Belleville with the by-law to be forwarded to the Ontario Municipal Board for approval.

The township clerk was also instructed to write to Gore and Storrie, consulting engineers, Toronto, to ascertain terms regarding plans in the water area adjacent to Belleville.

The Belleville Agricultural Society was given a grant of $150 and the July road voucher for $1,530.53 was ordered paid. A by-law was passed accepting the assessment of the township for 1947 and the tax rate by-law was given the necessary three readings.

Harvesting of Berry Crop on P.E. Farm Provides Much Employment

Red and blue gold hangs luxuriantly from richly-producing raspberry fields of the district.

One of the heaviest yields in years is bringing dollars to farmers, vitally-needed food to the country and a lucrative if temporary period of employment to hundreds of people.

Heavy trucks are streaming along highways loaded with crates of the luscious fruit, en route to canning factories, at present hives of activity where capacity staffs are engaged in preserving the berries.

Prices are the best in years. So keen is the demand from canning concerns that purchasing competition has boosted the quart-box price to forty-cents in the field.

Less Home Buying

Price quotations have reduced the domestic demand to a noticeable extent. The man on the street watching with concern the increasing price of foodstuffs, is buying cannily. Where he bought a crate or two in previous years, he is confining himself to a box or two for immediate table use. There has been very little mass buying by private citizens for home preserving purposes. He is looking twice at quart boxes marked between forty and forty-five cents.

But more or less feverish activity is apparent in the producing areas of the district.

In the eleven-acre "patch" owned by George Baitley, farmer residing near Wellington, Ont., upwards of one hundred pickers, of all ages, have been defying a merciless sun and heat to relieve the heavily-laden bushes of the crop.

And they are making money. Pickers are receiving nine cents a box, or can take their pay in fruit. One seven-year-old girl is proud of the fact that in her first money-making venture she has amassed $27 in two weeks in the berry fields.

All Classes Represented

It is a heterogeneous collection of humanity that makes up the picking gangs. Ranging in age from 75 to six years of age, they are composed of people from all walks of life. They arrive in automobiles from the 1947 vintage to the creaking, wheezing motorized scrap-heaps that shone in all their pristine glory at the time the Model T was the mechanical marvel of its day.

Others are transported by the employers. They come from as far as ten to fifteen miles away. One Indian family is represented by eight members from a grizzled grandmother to a sloe-eyed papoose. Aged men and dungaree-ed bobby-soxers pluck the fruit from the same bush. Huge sun hats protect the faces of grandmothers from the blazing rays of the sun. Young matrons bring their babies which are looked after by young people of the area.

And the flood of berries rolls consistently from bush to factory in a never-ending stream. For "the sun is shining and it's time to make hay."

Eleven Acres Berries

There is little time between one "picking" and the next. After all, eleven acres is a lot of territory and the large yield naturally slows down the tempo of harvesting.

One of the busiest persons on the job is Mrs. Baitley who checks all fruit coming from the patch to the crating shed. Mrs. Clifford Channel, her daughter is the administrative "officer" of the job. She handles all business between picker and employer. A dozen checkers are kept busy punching tickets while another dozen carry the loaded carriers which contain twelve boxes from the field to the shed.

Canning factory trucks rumble to and from the patch, carrying the juicy cargoes direct to the plant. Usually berries picked in the morning are safely put away in cans by nightfall.

It's a busy time in "Berryville".

High Water, Uneven Composition Of Bay Floor Add to Engineering Difficulties Building Dock Extension

With operations hampered by a bay level three feet above normal a great many engineering problems go into the construction of a 400-foot dock extension.

At least that is the impression gained in a brief conversation with Lloyd Kingston, young Prescott war veteran engineer and manager-president of the Lloyd Engineering Company who has the contract for the construction of the new dock extension at the Belleville Harbor.

Construction of the new dock extension, exclusive of the dredging which was completed last autumn, is estimated to cost in the neighborhood of $50,000.

Confronted with a bay floor which is part flat rock and another portion consisting of from eight to ten feet of harbor mud, two different methods of construction will be necessary to get a solid foundation for the new dock. For the rock floor a 120-foot cribwork of Norway pine has been built, this to be sunk in position, filled with rock and covered with concrete, while the balance of the dock will be built on piles driven into the harbor mud.

First Phase Underway

First phase of the construction is already underway with the recent launching of the huge frame cribwork which will be sunk onto the flat rock portion of the dock site. This cribwork constructed of pine timbers ten inches square was put together on the dock and then shoved into the water. Later it will be towed into position and by filling with rock will be sunk in 16 feet of water.

The entire cribwork structure was described merely as something to hold the rock on which the dock floor will be constructed. The cribwork portion of the dock will be floored with concrete while over the piles will be a floor of heavy plank. The new dock will accommodate boats drawing 16 feet of water and will facilitate the unloading of coal and oil tankers.

The extension will run 350 feet directly east of what is now known as the new Schuster dock and will have a 57-foot wing to the north.

Wealth of Experience

An engineering graduate of McGill University, Mr. Kingston has packed a wealth of engineering experience into his comparatively brief career. During the building of Dorval airport at Montreal he acted as chief construction engineer and at the outbreak of war went to England there to serve as engineer with the British Ministry of Aircraft Production.

In that capacity he assisted in building "everything from underground aircraft factories to air raid shelters for the workers", he related. Also while in England he had a go at technical research.

With the entry of the United States into the war in 1941 and with the ultimate gaining of aerial superiority by the Allies, activities with the British Ministry of Aircraft Production fell off and Kingston joined the air force. Too old for combat flying he was transferred to the ferry command and with this organization served until the end of the war. Prior to the war he had done some flying as a hobby.

Starts Own Business

On discharge from the air force Kingston decided to go into business for himself and with his engineering experience as a base founded the founded Lloyd Engineering. Questioned as to why the name Kingston had not been used in the firm name, he replied "It would have been too confusing."

Despite the fact that he is working on a government contract, material shortages have been holding back construction operations at the new dock addition. "Housing has first priority and we have to dig for our materials," was the comment.

Construction materials for the project are now coming through but the youthful construction firm manager-president still expects trouble with the high water. He inferred that the level of the Bay of Quinte normally dropped each fall and he is keeping his fingers crossed trusting the bay level will act in its normal way this year.

Belleville Rinks Win Major Honors At Local Tourney

Ideal weather favored the "Ladies' Lawn Bowling Trebles Tournament" held yesterday afternoon and evening, on the Belleville green, when twenty rinks were in play, coming from Cobourg, Brighton, Stirling and Kingston.

Major honors went to the Belleville teams, with Mrs. Cross' rink of Belleville rating 3 high wins of 45 plus 19 and Mrs. Hyde's rink of Belleville with the 2nd high three wins rating a score of 41 plus 20.

The two high wins went to Mrs. Drewery's rink of Brighton, with a score of 40 plus 5; Mrs. Watkins' rink of Belleville had a high-one win, with a score of 40. The no-win went to Mrs. Elliott's rink of Stirling, with a score of 33.

A delicious supper was served at six o'clock by the Belleville ladies, with all present agreeing that this had been an ideal day, the games having been keenly contested.

TRAILER MADE FOR LONGFELLOWS

Police Constable Herbert Baker of London has built a collapsible caravan in the sitting room of his bungalow. The job took him six months and materials cost $240. He wheeled the finished job through the French windows into the garden. Crammed with devices, the car can be raised from five feet to eight feet merely by turning a handle. For tall sleepers there is a panel in the side which can be opened to let the feet stick out. "Just to keep my toes warm," explains 6 ft. 6 in. Mr. Baker, shown.

Hear Attlee Speak

The other day when Prime Minister Attlee was delivering his address to the British Commons in which he outlined his austerity program for relief from the economic crisis, German prisoners of war on an officially conducted tour of the British House were privileged to hear this First Man of Britain tell his people what they must do to help meet the problems of this hour. Outside the Commons there was not interest shown by the British people for all realized that the time is a momentous one.

The Germans must have been rather mystified as to see the situation in which those who were foremost in the defeat of Germany have to bear such burdens as they have to carry today. Few Germans in Hitler's time would have thought of Germany going through such an ordeal if fate and the way of aggression had favored Germany. To the German Nazis victory would have meant the fattening of the German people on the incentive, initiative and labor of mind and body of the Allied peoples and so some at least of those who heard the address of Mr. Attlee must have been surprised to learn that the hard-lead to bear such problems as she has to carry today.

British through her war burdens and responsibilities helped to save the world and it cost her a great deal. That is the glory of the British cause, that the British are suffering as a result of their service for humanity, and that in the last the proof of the justice of their case and the proof of their greatness. It was a lesson for these prisoners to learn, for Nazi Germany nevertaught such lessons, her lessons were conquest and tyranny.

Music in Mental Ailments

That music is looked upon as a treatment in some kinds of mental ailments is the word from Washington. Even in the days of Shakespeare, who got to the core of mental infirmities in a time ages before the rest of the world knew what mental aberrations meant, spoke of those whose minds and emotions had been rocked as "sweet bells jangled out of tune." Experts may speak in more scientific language than the poet but the poet has spoken the word for all the ages.

That music which is built on harmony and "concord of sweet sounds" should bring back health to the distraught and broken mind and spirit should not be a source of wonder. There are some sounds of course that drive people "mad" as they say but are not music. Just as man to be himself must possess humanity in his soul so the rhythm of music must influence the inner harmony which everyone seeks to express in himself.

The poet put it another way when he said what perhaps surprises some:—"the man who has no music in his soul, nor is not moved by concord of sweet sounds is fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils" and will think that he is speaking for a character not for himself but the words do express the inner love of harmony which this poet saw as so necessary for the true enjoyment of life.

One of the tragic things of life is when sweet spirits are "jangled out of tune" by life's discords.

Fortunately modern psychology and medicine are doing wonderful things for people who have been so afflicted as to require treatment.

Not so long ago did the world hear for the first time of the benefits of insulin shock in bringing back to normalcy the distraught mind.

Hamilton Spectator remarks on this news, "of course some kinds of music have long been accepted as a cause of them" (mental ailments.) That is not the kind that are at work repairing minds that are frayed at the edge or shaken out of tune.

In many industries today the influence of appropriate music is seen as healing in its effect upon workers. Somehow chords of sweet harmony do link man with the wondrous miracle of life, which in itself is a miracle of the greatest harmonies. The exactness of the conditions under which life is possible indicates that harmony and the music are what lies behind the fabric of life, in its providential character and in making life possible.

The poet dramatist who stressed the harmonies of sound and saw in them an interpretation of life notes between his lines very many times, "soft music," the music that heals and blesses.

Lincoln's Figure Grows

It is an inspiring scene to find so much attention paid to the opening of the hitherto-sealed correspondence of the great Lincoln, for it was the man Lincoln the people were seeking. It is a privilege bestowed upon this age at this time to find the high appraisal of Lincoln as a leader of humanity maintained after more than eighty years after his death. His name charms and a century hence there can be no doubt that that name which has been given him will grow because his greatness was built on the true things of life, on great moral principles and these are unlimited.

Happy should be the nation that produced a Lincoln who could project the great principles of morality a century ahead of him and whose name will continue to grow down the ages and across the world. It is the proof of the greatness of the American spirit that his people can appreciate so fine a figure with all its moral grandeur.

That seems so characteristic of Lincoln in his every word and deed in the face of adverse conditions as he battled for the right is his steadfast regard for the things of value in life as true realities. To have lived like Lincoln though he had a feeling that he would die in the cause which he espoused is something so great that contemplation for him men will not fail to realise more and more after sounding a greater realm. That was something he applied to life and to government and by this he existed life. By his own life he widened the lives of other men.

Too Many Hitchers

Travelling along our highways reveals that there are too many hitch-hikers than ever. There are few men in uniform seeking rides today, but the civilian roadside solicitors seem to be on the increase. It is something the proportions of a major nuisance.

Except in rare cases, there is no excuse for hitch-hiking. Most of those engaging in this practice are quite able to pay their fares wherever they wish to go, and are merely trying to save some money at the expense of others, and usually only for the purpose of taking pleasure jaunts.

Hitch-hiking is dangerous, too. In the first place, the wise motorist does not pick up strangers, because he should know of many cases in which such charity has merely given the opportunity for robbery or worse. Aside from this angle, the importunate ones too often encroach on the highways themselves, causing traffic hazards. In the rare instances where drivers stop to offer a lift, their very action endangers those coming behind them, with the heavy travel at present on the roads. — Windsor Star.

Youth and Mink

Currently, official Canada is pondering the question of a suitable wedding present for Princess Elizabeth and Lieutenant Philip Mountbatten. This is a matter that is more a pleasure than a state duty, and it should not prove at all difficult.

With its wide range of resources and manufactures, Canada can provide an almost endless list of appropriate items. Some early suggestions are that the gift might be fashioned from precious metals, or take the form of a piece of jewelry.

The Princess is twenty-one, attractive, and her tastes do not differ from those of other girls her age. Our guess is that she would go for the mink coat. — Windsor Star.

Take Hail Storms in Stride

Tithe was in South Alberta, in the early days of settlement and real estate booms, when hail storms were "hush hush." We didn't want the outside world to know that we were bothered by such freaks of the weather. Now, however, we take them in our stride. We know hail storms will come just as will drought years and other hazards of grain growing. And if we have hail storms we do not get the cyclones and hurricanes of the grain belt farther south says Lethbridge Herald.

FRIENDLINESS

I've been round the town a bit,
Know it, end to end.
Think in every part of it
I could find a friend.

Never smiled on anyone
Who returned a frown.
Never had to turn and run
From a soul in town.

Know that people mean exist,
Quick to strike a blow.
Signs of friendship they resist.
Never met them, though.

Sure am I that this is so;
'Twasn't hard to learn:
For the friendliness we show,
Friendship will return.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Why are certain paintings called miniatures?

Miniatures are of the workmanship on ivory, metal and vellum were not originally called "miniatures" because of their diminutive size, as one would naturally suppose.

They were so called because they were painted with minimum, which is native cinnabar or red lead.

The paint, not the size, was responsible for the name.

"Miniare" in Latin means to paint with red lead, and the word from this root "miniatura" was formed and first applied particularly to illuminations on the margins of manuscripts and books. Since these paintings were usually small and since the word was popularly misunderstood to mean "minimum," smallest, "miniature" acquired the adjective force of "minute" or "diminutive" in size.

In "Hamlet" Shakespeare uses "picture in little" in the sense of a miniature.

When was the first successful Caesarean operation performed?

The earliest recorded Caesarean operation that was survived—by both mother and child—was performed in 1491 by a Swiss butcher and pig-gelder who operated on his wife.

Caesarean operations involved either mother or child survived had been performed much earlier, it is believed that the first successful operation of this kind in the United States was performed April 22, 1827, by Dr. John Lambert at Newton, N.C.

Nowadays it is not uncommon for women to undergo successfully several Caesarean operations.

In 1935 a mother and triplets all survived such an operation performed at Los Angeles.

Is there such a word as "alright"?

No such word as "alright" is recognized in modern English usage. It is branded by reputable dictionaries as an erroneous form of the phrase "all right." For a period during the 12th and 13th centuries — before the invention of printing — "alright" was employed by some eaters, by English writers, but "all right" had been previously preferred and it has been regarded as the correct form ever since. Leading English writers, however, insist on employing "alright" in place of "all right," analogous to "already" and "all ready," with a corresponding distinction in meaning.

Crerar Says Canada Interested in Revival Of Trade With Japan

Tokyo, Aug. 9 — (Reuters) — Gen. H. D. G. Crerar, head of Canada's Far East Trade Mission, told a press conference today that the Canadian government hoped that his visit to Japan would underline Canada's interest in the revival of pre-war trade with the Japanese.

Canada, he said, was "deeply interested" in Japan's political problems and desired to contribute "useful, sensible service to the task of writing the peace treaty."

Danger of War 15 Years Away Says Ross Munro

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Aug. 9 (CP)—The danger of war with Russia is 15 years away, Ross Munro, recently-returned European correspondent, told the Canadian Press here last night.

"You do not have to be long in the Soviet Union to see that the country is in no shape to wage a modern war," Mr. Munro said. "And she probably won't be for another 15 to 20 years. The Soviet Union, like Britain, was badly bombed at Lake Success, at Paris and the Big Four meetings in Moscow, is a comparatively exfeebled nation, despite its sprawling size and vast population.

"She has only potential strength for war. Her losses in the last one were so great it will take her years to recover. Her railroads are in terrible condition. She needs millions of rolling stock. Consumer goods of all kinds are greatly needed and her farm and agriculture she is only catching her breath. A nation cannot fight a successful war without transport, food, a thriving war industry and equipment. She has none.

Mr. Munro said the Russians have a very high standard of the military prowess of the United States and admire very often the for the technical development and brains of Britain, the United States and Canada.

"The Russian people, the ordinary people, like the British, have a horror of another conflict. It is propaganda only that is in that regimented police state; it would be difficult to get the people enthusiastically behind a war of Soviet aggression."

Buffalo Stampede Becomes Hunt

Coldwater, Mich., Aug. 8 — (CP)—Chief Big Thunder of the Buffalo roam was right here in Coldwater today.

The streets of the town became a hunting ground for the strayed animals — 13 of them — after a bull started the parade by jumping the special Buffalo fence at the farm of Edwin Buttery.

Naturally dogs barked, followed, and 10 steers went along for lack of something better to do, it seems.

Ensuing hours proved there wasn't a good experienced buffalo herd in town, and police and firemen were helpless. So a score of citizens got out their cars and drove and brought down the bisons in an old-fashioned buffalo hunt.

Result: Going the way of all flesh and bound for Buttery farm the buffalo will be shuffled off to Buffalo and New York where butchers have ordered 1,000 pounds of meat for $1 a pound. This time he's not sure the price will hold but since 13 buffalo might cause a glut on the market.

DANGER OF HEAT PROSTRATION

Heat prostration is a danger to be guarded against during the hot days of summer. Those who work in the open, or in hot factories, are especially liable to suffer from it. Symptoms are dizziness, headache, nausea, and sometimes vomiting. Victims should be taken to a cool place, and given a cool drink. Cold water is best, but if it is not available, a little salt should be added to the drinking water.

HOW TO BE COMFORTABLE TOO BATHED

One of the innumerable popular misapprehensions about health and sickness is that the itch (scabies) arises from lack of personal cleanliness. This notion is quite as sensible as that other popular misapprehension, that various ailments usually called "colds" come from exposure to some kind of weather or sudden change of temperature.

Scabies is caused by the parasite called the itch mite, Acarus scabiei, and it makes little progress whether one is well bathed or not bathed at all, one is just as likely to catch scabies or to give it to others. The popular superstitiousness with which one bathes has no appreciable relation with the freedom from disease.

Some skins are harmed by excessive bathing. Thousands of persons suffer with pruritus which is due mainly or wholly to excessive bathing. Pruritus is the name of those imposing terms we doctors like to use when talking to the public. It is like the term "cardiac" which we often use when we mean heart. To say a patient has heart trouble is not worth more than a couple dollars, but to tell the patient that there is a cardiac condition brings from $5 to $10 or more if it's a "cardiac decompensation." Latin word which doesn't mean any more than Latin does to me, but it costs more. There is a tendency to overdo the significance of pruritus to itching of the skin without evident skin disease or rash, but Dr. Noah Webster has not yet sanctioned this, any more than he has sanctioned the word cleri.

The majority of sufferers from both pruritus are over thirty, in their thirties, no matter about years. About the middle thirties people reach the peak of physical growth and begin almost imperceptibly after they slide slowly down to senility.

Dryness of the skin is an early sign of approaching senility. In youth the skin is soft, moist and oily and smooth, sometimes too oily. As years go by the skin begins to become dry, rough, harsh and irritable.

In youth all creams, greases, oils are best avoided, and plenty of soap and water used for daily skin and complexion.

After the less soap and water the better for skin and complexion, though a touch of one kind or another improves the condition of the skin and the appearance of the complexion.

People who bathe only to itch and scratch are always the victim of the following and apply it to the skin immediately after every application of soap and water.

This is to be agitated into an emulsion.

3. Ointment of Rose Water.)
This ointment is made of officially called Unguentum Aquae Rosae and is commonly known as cold cream. It must be made up fresh by your own druggist, and the formula in his official Pharmacopoeia. No stock proprietary preparation purporting to be cold cream can be used with satisfaction when one has pruritus. The making of a satisfactory Ointment of Rose Water demands the skill of the pharmacist, and most efforts at compounding this are disappointing.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Boy Waisted

I noticed what you said about sons and daughters and how you wish you had a son to leave behind as "one of the family." But, Tut, tut, doctor, those daughters of yours can solve that problem for you.

(Mrs. L. G.)

Answer—Make me an offer.

Running Ear

I had a discharging ear for several years, following scarlet fever. Ear specialist said only cure was operation on the bone, which he said was dangerous. Then I went to Dr. ——— and he taught me how to keep my ear clean with peroxide and blow in some boric acid. I did that, and the discharge soon ceased, and it has never discharged since, and that was 15 years ago. I can hear about as well with that ear as with the sound ear, and before I could scarcely hear at all with the bad ear.

(E. D. F.)

Answer—Thank you. If the ear specialist you consulted had had the experience and training in plain general practice which the country doctor has he might have given you good advice. But those big shot specialists are pretty narrow little chaps when it comes to a question like dry suppurtics. If they can't operate they are at a loss what to do for a patient. Send stamped envelope bearing your address and ask for pamphlet on Eardrops for Running Ear.

Cards' Pitching Staff in Better Shape Than in Victorious '46 Because Big Three Getting Help

World Champions Preparing for Stretch Drive That Will Bring Another Flag

By JACK HAND
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Eddie Dyer's St. Louis Cardinals are making their move toward a second straight National League pennant with a well-balanced pitching staff, superior to the three-man crew which carried the burden during the 1946 stretch drive to victory.

A year ago, Howie Pollet, Murry Dickson and Harry Brecheen had to stumble along with only occasional help from the other staff members. Now Dyer has that same trio, once again approaching their '46 effectiveness and a fine rookie in Jim Hearn plus a better-conditioned George Munger.

Munger could well be the key to the Pennant race. Much was expected of him off his pre-war record but he has failed to live up to expectations. That is, he failed to live up to them until last night when he shut out Pittsburgh with three hits for an eight straight Cardinal triumph 6-0.

While the Birds were blanking the Bucs, Brooklyn was shutting out Philadelphia 5-0, lambasting Dutch Leonard and Charley Schanz for 13 hits. Ralph Branca, who had failed three times in search of his 17th win, finally made the grade scattering eight hits to earn his fifth shutout.

Braves Beat Giants

Boston Braves overcame New York Giants' home runs by Buddy Kerr and Jack Lohrke to hand up a 7-5 win the 10th inning on a squeeze bunt by Johnny Hopp and a single by Frank McCormick.

Bill Nicholson's 11th inning homer enabled Chicago Cubs to shade Cincinnati's Ewel Blackwell 2-1, in the only day game played in the majors. It was the third loss in a row for Blackwell following his string of 16 straight victories.

Boston, opening a do-or-die series against the league-leading New York Yankees, hammered out a 9-6 win over the Yanks. Homers by Bobby Doerr, Jake Jones and Sam Mele told the story.

Detroit and Cleveland both went over the 1,000,000 mark in paid attendance. The Tigers' total of 1,014,307 after their 4-2 twilight loss to Chicago. Rudy York's two-run homer did the trick in the 10th, sending Hal Newhouser down with his 11th loss.

Al Gettel pitched Cleveland to a 4-1 nod over St. Louis Browns before 73,845 customers, boosting the season paid to 1,012,847.

A scheduled Washington at Philadelphia night game was postponed.

MISS CANADA 3RD WILL START IN GOLD CUP RACE

Harold Wilson, Ingersoll, Will Attempt to Wrest Trophy From Guy Lombardo

(By The Associated Press)

New York, Aug. 9—(AP)—The hard-luck driver of the 1946 gold cup race classic, Danny Arena of Oakland, Calif., once more will seek the elusive trophy as a score of power-packed speed craftsmen run through the waters of Jamica Bay tomorrow.

Arena, who will be piloting Herb Mendelson's Notre Dame, one of the 10 challengers to the title now held by Canadian-born music maestro Guy Lombardo, finished second in both the first two heats at Detroit last year and set a three-mile lap record of 77.831 miles an hour in the final.

Two miles from the finish of the gruelling 90 miles, Danny was forced out of action when his craft, Miss Golden Gate developed oil line trouble. In the 1939 race, also at Detroit, Danny finished second to Count Theo Rossi of Italy.

"If the trophy has to go back to Detroit, said Lombard, I'd just as soon see Danny take it as anyone else."

But the London, Ont., native isn't figuring on letting the honor he won in his first year of big-time speedboat competition slip away so easily. He holds two of the three gold cup records established last year and he's out to better them on his own waters.

An international flavor is lent to the tussle by the entry of Miss Canada III, a veteran gold cup racer owned by E. A. Wilson of Ingersoll, Ont., one of the three newest boats entered. Miss Canada boasts of a 12-cylinder rolls-royce merlin engine capable of developing 1,700 horsepower.

NEWARK BEARS EASILY DEFEAT TORONTO LEAFS

With Score Tied in Fourth Winners Score Four Runs on Two Triples, Single and Walk

(By The Associated Press)

Jake Wade, 35-year-old lefthander is one of the reasons Jersey City Giants are in the thick of the International league pennant scramble.

The Giants, who weren't figured as a pennant threat at the start of the campaign, are only 3½ games behind the leading Montreal Royals today.

Wade has contributed 11 victories to the Giant cause while sustaining only four setbacks and the veteran spears better every time out.

Yesterday, after southpaw Jack Kraus turned back Rochester Red Wings 2-1 in the first game of a doubleheader, Wade pitched the Giants to a 4-2 10-inning triumph in the nightcap.

Meanwhile, the last-place Baltimore Orioles eked out a 5-7 triumph over the Royals. The Orioles built up a 6-0 lead but the Royals tied the count with ed ahead 7-6 with a run in the a six-run rally in the fifth, movesixth only to have the Orioles come back with two to win the game. Al Chhocki drove in what proved to be the winning run.

The third-place Syracuse Chiefs outslugged the fourth-place Buffalo Bisons 9-8. The Bisons jumped off to a 5-0 advantage in the first frame but the Chiefs rallied for seven runs.

New Zealand Champion Gets The Nod Over Palermo Kid After Three Weeks of Effort

There ain't no joy in Palermo but down New Zealand way the sun is shining, the children are happy, all's right with the world.

For didn't their doughty champion Kenny Kenneth, a blonde bundle of fighting wrestling charm after weeks of struggle, and what not finally subdue the snarling panther from Palermo, John Katan and send him back growling to his lair.

It's true s'welp me. Kenneth after taking practically everything Big Jawn had in the bag of y'll-lainy finally pinned the big Canadian-Ukrainian and earned for himself a shot at the British Empire crown which adorns the cleek locks of one Whipper Billy Watson.

But Kenneth won the bout the hard way. He had to meet the onslaught of Katan and the apparently Katanish sympathy of pint-sized Referee Bert Maxwell. That gentleman at times almost wept when he saw pressure being exerted on various parts of the Kelan anatomy and placing a hand over his perspiring brow to hide the tears, ordered Kenneth to break whatever hold he had and sent him scrambling to a neutral corner to be a good boy or Poppa Maxwell would spank.

As a matter of fact Mr. Kenneth whose pet aversion is referees after his alleged treatment at the hands of Arbiter Ernie Powers last week was not averse to taking the odd sock at the portly figure of Le Maxwell. The crowd enjoyed the by-play but the Maxwellian torso did not appear to be exactly in concord with the performance.

Katan was up to his old tricks and used everything but the postoffice stamp in stalling for the count-buildings in an effort to subdue the fast-moving New Zealander. He prodded his eyes, rubbed his ears, secured his favorite neck-hold on various occasions and proceeded to massage the Kenneth optics with a chunk of gravel as big as a ham. This apparently met with the approval of Referee Maxwell, who, 'tis true at times almost wept when he saw pressure being exerted on various parts of the Kelan anatomy and placing a hand over his perspiring brow to hide the tears, ordered Kenneth to break whatever hold he had and sent him scrambling to a neutral corner to be a good boy or Poppa Maxwell would spank.

But the doughty guy from down under went on to absorb everything in the punishment line that the panther could produce. He did not let down for a minute and while at times he stuck out the proverbial neck, literally and figuratively, he weathered the storm with typical down-under tenacity flew back to the attack before Le Katan could get his breath.

He didn't even mind the time when Big Jawn tired of the ring antics heaved Kenneth out of the ring, followed him, picked him up and deposited him via aerial route on the front laps of spectators sitting in the third row back.

Things got tough for a bit s'wright, grinned the sweating Kenneth gazing more or less apprehensively into the eyes of a startled blonde. Hastily making a date for next Easter, he realized that Referee Maxwell was twiddling his thumbs and doing a bit of arithmetic in the ring, and he reluctantly relinquished his seat, for the business at hand.

And his efforts were rewarded. He took the first fall with a rolypoly roll-over and won the match with the same hold. Referee Maxwell was surprised at the outcome and after his usual third fall siesta decided to call it a night and waved aloft the Kenneth flipper.

Mike Sharpe and Strangler Bob Wagner battled to a draw while Pat Flanagan subdued the danger of Dan O'Connor.

Princess to Decide Form of Service For Her Wedding

Canterbury, Kent, Eng., Aug. 9 (CP)—Rt. Rev. Geoffrey Fisher, Bishop of Willesden, today presented Princess Elizabeth with a prayer book containing the form of the marriage service to enable her "to decide which of the two variations you want to use".

On the occasion of Princess Elizabeth's address to the Church of England Youth Council, Dr. Fisher said:

"Since 1928 the marriage service has become a bit more complicated. You have to decide which of the two variations you want to use. In something you with this new prayer book which combines the two services, we hope it will help you to see what is before you."

The shorter book, published last month, includes both the marriage form used in 1662 and the form given in the 1928 prayer book. The latter version differs in several ways, including omission of the word "obey".

Molyneux Designs More Austere

Paris, Aug 9—(AP)—Capt. Molyneux seems to have kept in mind the austerity rules still prevailing in Britain for the designing of his Paris fall collection.

Molyneux also has a home in London, and it is he who makes dresses for the Royal household.

His is a typical English way of tailoring clothes, especially tailored suits and morning dresses. He wants them practical and snug and he likes women to show their legs. None of his skirts, except of course dinner and evening clothes, go below mid-calf.

As for coats, they have drooping shoulders, very large armholes, and they are pretentious. They are in black wooly material in pale shades of yellow beige, or grey astrakan or shell-colored fox.

Evening dresses are more fantastic, with tight waistlines here and there, and heavy black silk embroidery and small waisted bolero. Bodices are made fitting with large square decolletes, and skirt billowing from a high halfway between the waistline and the hipline.

PT. ANNE WINS THIRD STRAIGHT FROM CNR VETS

With Ranks to Wall, Vets Must Start Win Parade Here on Monday; Score Was 10-3

Taking advantage of some timely hitting and the loose infield play of the C.N.R. Vets, Frank Sedgwick's Point Anne team last night downed the men of Manie 10-3 in a City Softball League game at Point Anne last evening.

Ken Ox Painters opened up against Adams starting pitcher for the Vets, when Marcelle drove a ground ball through the shortstop. Then Mahoney connected for a home run over Leo Guyer's head. Bennett hit a single and Stem filled out the first inning. Horwood got on a fielder's choice that saw Bennett nipped at second; Boyle and Green hit singles to load the bases and Whitehead went down short in second to retire the side.

The Leafs came back in the third inning to score three runs. Sero hit a home run over the left field fence. Adams to the showers. Jim Hunter took over with none of the runs allowed him after two before retiring the side.

With the score 5-3 in the seventh inning and the Vets threatening, Point Anne's bag full.

The score stood 8-3 in the eighth inning when the Leafs came to life to get six hits. Some poor infield is playing gave the Leafs three scores. Adams reached 1st on the inning with a single that stretched to a double on a wild throw. Sero hit a single and Horwood scored Bennett with a double. Boyle struck out and Green scored Sero with a single. Then came the fatal boner of the season. With Ogden and Strachan on base Marcelle hit a drive that was bobbled. The throw came in from the left fielder to Moe Billing at second base. Moe thought the ball was out and threw to Bennett as the tenth batter singly grounded to third, retiring the side.

The C.N.R. child not do anything correctly. It seems as Vern Guyer at short committed five errors. Moe Rollins' two run error was not charged. The Bridge boys are playing on the infield and two otherwise easy outs went for home runs.

Point Anne played steady ball all night long as though they wanted to win the game. The Anne-ite spirit was shown in the second inning when Green ran down a fly ball terrific in left field to score a fine catch by Al Bowbottom.

Boyle went the distance for the Point Annes striking out four, walking five, and giving up three hits for three runs. Adams started for the losers and was relieved by Hunter in the third after giving up two runs. A straight steam rolled one and gave up four hits for four runs. Hunter pitched the remainder of the game, striking out four, walking none, and allowing thirteen hits for six runs.

The lineup:

Vets: Barclays relieved by Whiteen in fifth; R. Carson for Williams of; V. Guyer ss; Rondel 3b; C. Guyer c; Hawthorne c; Rollins 1b; Adams, relieved by Hunter in the third, p.

Leafs: Marcelle, relieved by Zimmerman in the ninth, of; Mahoney c; Bennett 1b; Sero ss; Horwood 2b; Boyle 3b; Green of; Whitehead 3b; Bradshaw rf.

The score by innings:

Vets	000	012	10–	3	9	6
Leafs	203	000	03x–	10	13	0

SAYS MEYER FATHERED HER CHILD

An interesting study of blonde Patricia Miles, 25-year-old cigarette girl, and her baby son, Douglas Meyer, six months old, who she says, was fathered by Johnny Meyer, Howard Hughes' publicist and a U.S. Senate sub-committee investigating Hughes' wartime contracts. On complaint of the ex-model, a warrant has been issued against Meyer.

BATA SHOEMEN DEFEAT JUNIORS BY 5-4 COUNT

Count Four Runs in Second Innings; Kids Come Back Strongly to Score Four in Fourth, but 'Twas Hardly Enough

Taking full advantage of two bases on balls, an error, and a brace of timely hits by Aquino and Watson, the Bata Shoemen got their first win over first place in the Belleville district baseball league at Bata last evening when they scored four runs in the second inning to best the local Kiwanis Juniors by a 5-4 score count.

In fact all runs by both teams were scored in three innings as the Shoemen went into a one run lead in the first canto and followed in the second with four while the Juniors made their bid for victory in the fourth inning as they counted their four runs on two bases on balls and three hits.

With the game failing to get underway until nearly seven only five and one half innings were put in. The Juniors' outfit the homesters 7-3—but with the exception of the one inning failed to bunch their clouts effectively. Bowman handled the hurling chores for the winners, giving up two walks and striking out nine. Semark allowed but four hits while Bunton and Peacock's singles were wasted as Rankin flew to right.

They came right back in the second with four as they batted all the way around to score four runs on two hits, a single by Aquino and a double by Watson.

Juniors got their four in the fourth when Soules led off with a walk. R. Green and Reeves singled. Strachan drew a pass and Bunton showed three runs scoring with a mammoth triple. Bowman then bore down to get the next two batters.

Coach "Speedy" St. Louis started the game catching for the Juniors but in the second received a foul tip on the thumb and was forced to retire.

Erecting another 70,000 horsepower generator at new DeCew Falls plant near St. Catharines.

HYDRO SPEEDS NEW POWER PLANTS

Hydro is pushing construction to meet the pressing demand for more electricity. The above huge generator will soon pour an additional 70,000 horsepower into the Hydro system from the DeCew Falls plant near St. Catharines.

Two other larger plants in eastern Ontario, now under construction, will deliver 81,000 horsepower next year and 360,000 horsepower by 1951. These two major developments, with the DeCew Falls addition, will provide Ontario with a further badly needed half-million horsepower.

The growing output of Ontario's industries and farms benefits everyone but calls for more and more electricity. Even now that the war is over, the demand has not slackened but continues to mount. Hydro's peak load increased by more than 500,000 horsepower over the highest wartime demand, an increase of 23%. Generating plants take a long time to build and could not be started during the war.

Few places in the world have as much electricity available per person as Ontario. However, we must use our electricity sparingly so that all homes, all farm services and all industries will receive their share.

Will you do your part? . . . USE HYDRO WISELY and there will be enough for all.

When not writing or playing bridge, I pick up a bridge magazine or a bridge column. My attention is reading what experts have to say about the game. Some sound as if they knew something.

What they know may not be good for your or my game. The way they tell it is frequently wrong for my game, but, probably, right. But it is nice to hear how the other half live, when they are favored indeed.

Before me is a learned piece on the choice of responding bids. The opener started with one spade. He is talking about the reply by the partner who held this hand:

♠ 4 3 ♡ 8 3 ♢ 6 5 ♣ A K 5 4 2

This hand has enough for a takeout to two spades, also for a single raise in spades. Which should be selected? It depends, he says, on the opener's conservatism or aggressiveness.

With an aggressive opener, a response of two diamonds is unwise; a jump to three spades is too strong; a single raise to two spades is right. Here are his recommendations. Not mine.

With a conservative opener, a single raise to two spades by the responder is too weak; a jump to three spades is right. Take out to two diamonds is best. Again these are his advices. Not mine.

Is there a psycho-analist in the house? When you respond to a bid, he could breathe down your neck and say: "That is no time to takeout. Raise. Your partner is aggressive right now."

We do not hire any shke-asnites to tell us how to bid each and every hand. We know how by one simple guide. It is the order in 4-3-N; takeout first, assist second, no-trump last. Our partners turn conservative on us just when we expect them to be aggressive.

Come to think of it, here is a field the unions have overlooked. An enterprising organizer could start an OPA (obnoxious psycho analists).. Their scale should be established at 50c per parties. .

The Movie Column

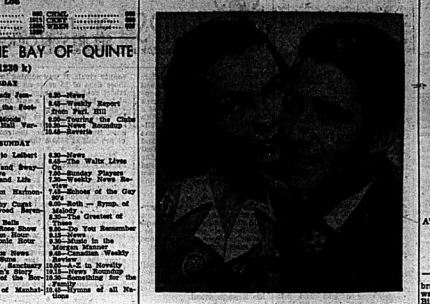
By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, Aug. 9 —(AP)— Gary Cooper, whose career as extra and star has spanned a large part of Hollywood history, thinks some changes are needed in making pictures in this town.

The tall and taciturn Montanan dipped his toe into independent production with "Along Came Jones" and would like to try again. But the meteoric rise of production costs has discouraged him, as it has many others.

"Pictures don't have to cost that much," he complained.

"What we need are fresh, bright stories. Instead of spending all the money on expensive production, the actors, story and a bright script should be enough."



Cooper has touched upon a matter which worries many people. Hollywood, as a matter of fact, seems to have gone Hollywood.

There once was a time when movie stars would lavish their money on splendiferous and foolish luxuries. Today most of them can't afford it. But the studios have taken over. They have been spending about costs, but what does one see? Big, expensive sets crowded with extras. Re-shooting and re-shooting of scenes which often are cut from the picture. And multi-million-dollar budgets.

"But," you complain, "who cares how they toss their money around? They're making lots of it."

True, but unless you consider movie theatres merely a solution to your housing problem, you should care. Because when Hollywood starts thinking the way to make movies is to throw together a bunch of expensive scenes, then you'll be seeing a lot of turkeys on your neighborhood screen.

You can forgive a modestly-budgeted film for some of its failings. But if a picture comes along with big stars, expensive talent behind the camera, huge sets, and still turns out bad—well, there's no bore like a big bore.

AT THE BELLE — Kathryn Grayson and Peter Lawford, Hollywood's newest romantic couple, are the girl and boy of "It Happened in Brooklyn," M-G-M's happy new musical hit, featuring Jimmy Durante, due today on the Belle Theatre screen.

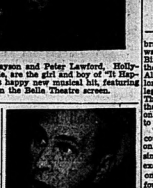
New York, Aug. 9 —(CP)— The movies for some time have found it profitable to turn out pictures recreating lives of colorful characters of the past. Now the stage is following the same trend.

Two scripts, one dealing with Diamond Jim Brady, a spectacular han-about-town in the New York of a half-century ago, and the other with Cole Miller, an 18th century London comic who was notably down-at-heel, are in the hands of producers who plan to put them on Broadway.

Brady, renowned for the sizeable diamonds with which he adorned himself, is the principal character in "So Merrily We Sail," a musical by Joe Stein for which casting is due to start next week.

Michael Kanin has written the other script, also a musical tentatively titled "The Life and Good Times of Joe Miller" which is rather a mouthful for any theatre marquee. Burt Lahr is slated to enact the role of Miller, whose name is traditionally associated with the lame and outworn jest.



Production plans for these shows may well have been inspired by the success of "Annie Get Your Gun," the musical about the fabulous Annie Oakley, 19th century woman sharpshooter.

Laurentian Scene.

Producer Robert Reud plans to bring to Broadway in November "Q-Onward Heart," a new play by Hazell MacCallum, a Canadian author with a setting in the Laurentians. It is described as a "gay and poetic comedy" which purports to show "the re-shaping of the lives of an assembly of people on a night when tragedy strikes."

Garfield for "Streetcar."

John Garfield, whose face is more familiar on the screen than the Broadway stage, is to play the leading role in Tennessee Williams' play, "A Streetcar Named Desire," which Irene M. Selznick is to produce. Jessica Tandy has been signed for the feminine lead. It will be Garfield's first appearance on the stage here since 1940.

AT THE McCARTHY. — A sequel to their first starring picture, Bud Abbott and Lou Costello are again in uniform for the opening sequences of their latest, starring comedy, "Buck Privates Come Home," a Universal-International picture, now playing at the McCarthy.

BULLETINS FROM BIRDLAND

BY WINIFRED E. WILSON

SHORE BIRDS

"Pewit - pewit - pewit." The sound came closer, then died away.

"What was that noise? Is it a frog or a bird?" Bobbie asked, looking up from his sand castle on the beach.

"Didn't you see the little bird?" Alice laughed. "It flew right around us, in a semi-circle. I noticed the white line on its wings as it passed low over the water. Now it is running lightly along by the rock to your left. It is one of the most common of our Sandpipers, called Spotted because of its large, round, blackish spots on its breast and sides."

"Did it get its surname because it lives on the shore?"

"Yes, you're quite correct: it nests right on the sand. It doesn't even use any building material but hollows out a place in the sand near a clump of grass or a small bush and there lays the eggs. Sandpiper babies belong to the order called Shore Birds."

"How do you know Shore Birds from any other kind?" demanded the young questioner. "I saw a Kingfisher here a few minutes ago. Is it a Shore Bird?"

"Oh, no! A Kingfisher lives in a hole in the bank, and sits on a branch overlooking the water to watch for fish; but it isn't a Shore Bird. They are known both by their looks and by their actions. All have at least moderately long, and some very long, thin legs for wading in shallow water. Their bills are long and slender, their wings long and pointed. The only short thing about them seems to be their tails.

"And as for their habits: of course they all spend their time on the shore; but there are other similarities. All the Shore Birds except the Solitary Sandpiper nest on the ground, generally have four eggs, but are seldom able to bring up more than two children. As soon as the babies are hatched they are covered with down, and almost immediately leave the nest. All have at least moderately long, and some very long, thin legs for wading in shallow water. Their bills are long and slender, their wings long and pointed. The only short thing about them seems to be their tails.

Solunar Tables:

The Proof of the Pudding

By JOHN ALDEN KNIGHT

Noted Sportsman, Author and Creator of Solunar Tables

It is probably inevitable, in the course of human events, that the great North American sporting fraternity should grow somewhat weary of hearing me sound off about the Solunar Theory and its workings. For that I can't find it in my heart to hold them at fault. No doubt they claim, and not without some justification, that I, being the inventor, developer and perpetrator of the Solunar Theory and the Solunar Tables, am preduḍiced to the point of total blindness.

For that very reason, it is most satisfying now and then to hear what the other fellow has to say about the Solunar Tables. At least, it is to me. In Tulsa, Oklahoma, there is a man named Bud Jackson who is Director of Merchandising and Promotion of Radio Station KVOO. In addition, he conducts an outdoor sports program called "Short Casts and Wing Shots."

I have not had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Jackson. I can give you my unqualified assurance that what he has to say is not influenced either by friendship or economic pressure. In other words, Bud Jackson speakes as an independent investigator or checker-upper who decided to find out whether I was fair in my claims for the Solunar Theory or just one more nature faker.

The following, entirely unexpurgated and unaltered, is what he had to say, in one of his broadcasts. I'll pass it along to you, quoted exactly from the script which he was kind enough to send to me. Thois is as it went out over the air—

"John Alden Knight, who is generally conceded to be among the handiest men with rod-and-reel on the North American continent, has given more than casual thought to the reasons behind game and fish behavior. Some years ago he came up with a theory which he called the 'Solunar Theory' and which, subsequently, has earned him both kind and unkind publicity.

"The Solunar Theory is based, in essence, upon Knight's belief that game and fish are prone to have certain periods of activity and inactivity just like human beings are. We all will recognize that and admit its possible truth. But he went a good deal further. Jack Knight contended that these activity periods occurred at a different time each day. And finally, he offered the theory that the sun and the moon were the forces which exerted an effect upon wildlife—and man, too.

"Accordingly, he drew up what he called 'solunar' tables, the word being derived from the word 'sol' meaning sun, and the word 'luna' or moon. These tables purported to show the several periods during each day when solar and lunar influence was greatest upon the creatures of the earth.

"Applying his theories to the test, Jack Knight began checking his creel against his solunar tables. He discovered that while the so-called solunar period occupied, on the average, perhaps only 10 percent of the total time in each day, he was catching 90 percent of his fish during that period.

"Over a period of years, he gave the theory test after test. It wasn't infallible. But it was right most of the time and he reasoned that those times when it was wrong might be accounted for by local disturbances storm conditions, wind velocities, atmospheric pressures and the like.

"We will not go so far as to say that we wholeheartedly subscribe to Jack Knight's solunar tables as a cure-all for fishing ills. But their author makes no such claim for them—he merely labels them a guide to good hunting and fishing and states it as his belief that if hunting or fishing is good at any time during a given day, it will be at its best during the period of solunar activity.

"We agree with him in that respect, for a quick check of our fishing log reveals the following concerning our favorite farm pond:

"Number of different days fished—12.

"Total hours of fishing—56.

"Total fish caught—87.

"Total hours fishing in solunar period—10 (on the basis of 1 hour to the period)

"Total fish caught in solunar period—64.

"Percent of fish caught in solunar period—74 per cent.

"Percent of time fished in solunar period—17 per cent

"Find anything significant in that? Surely anyone must, for 74 per cent of the fish were caught in 17 per cent of the time. And that 17 per cent represented Solunar activity time.

"I'll take a ticket on Jack Knight's theory any day for that kind of fishing success!"

Needless to say, I am extremely grateful to Mr. Jackson. Some day I hope to meet him and, possibly, to shoot or fish with him. Until then, I'll say it in writing—many, many thanks for a fair and unbiased opinion.

With Mr. Jackson's experience in mind, let me remind you again to plan your days in the open with the aid of the Solunar Tables.

Legion Teams Meet Here Tonight

Sports attraction tonight is the return game between the softball squads of the Belleville Canadian Legion and Peterborough Legionnaires. The local vets took a lacing from the Petes comrades in the first meeting and tonight they have blood in their collective eyes and are out to wipe out the defeat. The game starts at 6:30 at Exhibition Park, and it should be worth seeing. The local team has greatly strengthened its lineup and promises there will be no lopsided score unless the visitors are on the short end of it.

CHIPS OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

By GEORGE H. CARVER, Sports Editor.

Junior baseball ambassadors of goodwill the Kiwanis baseball team were afforded a fine reception during their visit to Lanark where they won both ends of a twin bill against the Smith's Falls juniors and a Lanark all-star aggregation. The kids came back full of enthusiasm and praise for the good folk of that town, who applauded every fine play they made on the diamond despite the fact the home team was on the short end of the score.

The Lanark Era which appeared at this desk this morning paid fine tribute to the Kiwanis kids for their gentlemanly behavior, prowess on the diamond and their general deportment.

Writing about one of the ball games, the Lanark scrivener paid special tribute to youthful Vern Green, dusky receiver of the Kiwanis squad.

"Highlight of both games," he wrote, "was the work behind the plate of Vernon Green, the classy catcher of the Belleville team. Green was the spark plug of the team, pouring out an endless stream of chatter throughout the games, and keeping his team right on their toes with his snappy playing. Green, who performed at second base when the team played at Lanark last year, has been converted into a catcher, and put on one of the best displays of catching seen here for some time. His homer over the fence in the eighth inning of the first game drew a big hand from the crowd. The longest hit of the game went to Huck Reeves, Belleville third sacker, who bounced one off the roof of the hall 400 feet away in the third inning, with one runner on base."

Picton sports scriveners are justifiably proud of the diamond exploits of the Bloomfield baseball entry in the County League. It seems the boys from the canning village have won all seventeen starts this season which the Picton scribes state "is something of a record".

In addition they lay claim to an unusual no-hit no-run game in which two of the Bloomfield flingers participated. It seems that in this game the manager started "Ruby" Hicks, well-known in this city, and the Rube heaved the pill for three innings. Then an opposing batter tipped back a half dozen fouls as did the next two. Whether the master-mind tired of seeing the balls go astray or he felt the Rube was tiring, he yanked him and sent in a hurler named Platford.

That enterprising young "Newhouser" hitched up his britches, gnawed off a healthy chaw of chawin' and proceeded nonchalantly to mow the opposition down hitless and runless for the rest of the game.

And up in the ghostly bleachers the spirits of Bloomfield's old-time baseball greats sat back and applauded. There was "Ham" Hamilton, immaculate in his "banker" clothes with his inevitable bulldog, the first to carry the mail in the village barking his approval. There was Roy Stewart, starry righthander of the days when Demorestville, Deloro, Frankford, Wellington and other district teams packed their squads and went out for blood. There was Howard "Ikey" Bowerman, "Toby" Arkett, Jack Eaton, Delbert Steinburg, "Ike" Maracle, the nervous Indian who jumped ten feet and laid a hay-maker on the chap standing nearest him if you sneaked up behind Ike and yelled "snake", and many others of the days when the village declared a half-holiday and went out en masse to the ball games.

"Them were the days" Wellington and Bloomfield not to mention Picton were bitter county rivals. It was nothing in those days of 25 cents an hour labor; cent apiece eggs, butter at two bits a pound, a suit for eight or ten dollars, beefsteak 18 cents a pound, to import hurlers from Rochester, Toronto, Buffalo and other centres of pro ball at $500 a throw.

At one time, if our boyhood memory is correct, the village was represented by only three local players, Johnny McMahon, Billy Wilder and Burl Fanning. The rest were imports, but who cared. The game was the thing and a win was a bigger thing.

And the boys laid plenty of lettuce on the line. We recall at one game, the father of one of the players galloping madly along the first base line after the offspring had clouted the ball for a hit, yelling, "Run like h——, Johnny, I've got $500 on yuh."

Time stopped when one of the big games took place. The "seed-house" shops, factories closed down to let the population see the game. The entire village numbering some 800 souls in that era, augmented by hundreds of visiting fans thronged the ball diamond. There were fist fights and feminine arguments. On one occasion a house burned down during a ball game. The owner and the village did not know it until the last ball had been pitched.

CANADIAN DAVIS CUP TEAM LOSES TO AUSTRALIA

"Down Under" Pair Capture Doubles Match to Clinch Series, Meet Czechoslovakia

By ROBERT CLARKE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, Aug. 9 —(CP)— Australia stood on the threshold today of a chance to engage the United States in the Davis Cup final, with only one nation — Czechoslovakia — blocking the path.

Aussie net men blasted Canada into the discard yesterday as Jack Bromwich and Colin Long won in the doubles over Gordie MacNeil and Edgar Lanthier 6-2, 6-1, 6-0. Australia had captured the opening singles Thursday with Dinny Pails and Geof. Brown as their representatives.

Today, with nothing at stake, Pails will play against Brendan Mackey in one singles match while Brown will engage Henri Rochon in the other. It is likely that the members of the Czech team will be on hand at the Mount Royal courts to witness the games.

The two top singles players on the Czech team — Jaroslav Drobny and Ferenc Cernik — were due to arrive here from Europe by plane today. They will be joined by Ladislaw Hecht, third member of the team, who has been in New York.

The Australia - Czechoslovakia inter-zone final will be played on the Mount Royal grass courts next Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Captain Roy Cowling of the Australian team, while feeling naturally enough that his men will come through with a victory, admits that it should be a "close series." Australia lost the cup to the United States last year.

By SYD THOMAS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, Aug. 9 — (CP) — Boxing fans with a yen for a good show and a nostalgic eye cocked at the past, turned out 2,500 strong in Montreal Wednesday night to add their bit to the Frankie Fleming fund.

Fleming, one of Canada's greatest little men of the old days, and one who held his own with the best of the game early in the century, didn't have the luck to cash in on the fat purses of recent years. His fights with Benny Leonard, Freddy Welsh and other top-notchers were classics of the times, but the occasions he drew purses of more than $1,000 could be counted on the fingers of one hand. Hence the benefit.

After expenses were deducted Wednesday night, Frankie was richer by more than $1,700, a sum which when added to the donations made in recent weeks by sports followers will help keep the wolf away from the door.

A Prime Show

The fans got value for their money, too. Joe Brown, a chocolate-colored scrapper from down New Orleans way, pulled a surprise as he decisioned Canada's lightweight champion, dusky Danny Webb, in 10 rounds, and Maxie Berger and Dave Castilloux clowned through a three-rounder, showing surprising ability for their advanced years.

But the surprising thing about the whole show, as viewed by Elmer (Montreal Herald) Ferguson, was the fact that 90 per cent at least of those who turned out never saw Fleming fight. And probably nearly as many had never heard of the game little scrapper of another era.

"So it wasn't just a tribute to a fighter those present had seen, and admired, and rooted for," said Fergie, "it was a tribute by sports folk, spanning the years, to one who had been . . . a great athlete and a sports envoy on behalf of Canada."

Fleming, in Fergie's view, was "one of the great fighters Canada sent to the ring, ranking with Broullard and Delaney. But he was born a generation too soon to cash in on his skill. Fighters he would make look like novices are piling up fortunes today."

TWO FIREMEN RECEIVE INJURIES IN $250,000 OTTAWA BLAZE

Two firemen were injured, a district fire chief narrowly escaped death from electrocution, and damages estimated at $250,000 were the results of the three-alarm fire in downtown Ottawa, Ont. The fire started when a pot of grease boiled over on the stove in the kitchen of the Tea Garden restaurant. Many firemen were overcome by smoke while working on the roof. Photo shows the firemen receiving first-aid treatment on the spot. It is believed that rubber boots and coat saved District Fire Chief Dunning from electrocution. LINCOLN PREFERRED TO SIT FOR THIS ONE

Henry C. Roberts, the owner, shows a hitherto undisclosed bust and life mask of Abraham Lincoln made in Chicago in 1860 by Leonard W. Volk before Lincoln's nomination for the U. S. presidency. Sculptor Volk said, according to the Century illustrated monthly magazine of December, 1881, that Lincoln told him before posing that he had never sat before for sculptor work or paintings and asked what to do. Lincoln stripped to the waist without hesitation, he said, "He entered my studio on Sunday morning," said Volk, "reminding that a friend at a hotel had invited him to attend church." Volk said Lincoln told him, "I thought I'd rather come and sit for the bust. The fact is, I don't like to hear cut and dried sermons."

MACABRE BURIAL RITES FOR SOAP MADE FROM MEN

Horrifying as a nightmare is the story behind these pictures. After the wholesale murder of 100,000 Romanian Jews in "horror camps," the Nazi used the bodies to make soap fats. Los Angeles, Aug. 8 — (AP) — Counsel for Mrs. Harriet V. Fields, widow of comedian W. C. Fields, says a suit against his estate is planned in connection with her claim of $341,330.

Take the Laughter

By Karen De Wolf

CHAPTER 2

He nodded gravely and stepped in and closed the door. In a moment Sherry returned with the onions.

The young man accepted it.

He said, "I thank you from my heart's bottom," very gravely. "But I should have told you! I am Sandro Duval. We live down at the end."

Sherry smiled. "Oh, of course! And you have three cats and a dog. The manager told me."

Sandro looked pleased that they had been discussed.

"I'm Sherry Lynne," she said. "You've French, aren't you?"

Sandro said: yes.

"I have been here 14 months, thought," he went on—my father taught English at the university at home. That is why I speak it so good."

Sherry wanted to laugh, but she said, You do speak it splendidly."

Sandro said, "But I have been told that. Further, I have been told that except for my slight accent one would think me an American."

He seemed very pleased about that.

"My name is Allesandro," he explained, "but here in America one does not have time for it."

He sat down on the davenport.

It was 10 minutes later that the knocker banged again and Sandro sprang to his feet.

"That will be for me," he said. "I have a feeling." And Sherry opened the door to Tony.

He was slightly shorter than Sandro with broad shoulders and a military bearing. He was annoyed.

He said, "I'm sorry to bother you, but is Sandro Duval here?"

Sherry said: "Why, yes. Won't you come in?"

Tony stepped in and glared at Sandro.

"Is that the onion for the stew?" he wanted to know.

Sandro handed him the onion.

He said, "And this is Miss Sherry Lynne, who so kindly supplied it. Anthony Dietrich."

Tony's heels clicked as he made a brief bend from the waist, and for the first time he really saw Sherry.

He said, "I'm sorry to follow him like this, but he forgets things."

"That's perfectly all right," Sherry told him, but she thought, "And you wouldn't! Not ever. You'd remember if people were waiting for you and you'd worry about it."

Sandro said, "Tony is Austrian-Viennese. But he speaks English good, also."

Tony laughed. It was sudden and infectious.

"He thinks he hasn't any accent," he told Sherry, "It's worse than mine."

He turned to Sandro.

"Do you want to eat or not?"

After they had gone, Sherry closed the door for a moment. She stood and thought about Tony. He was not so classically handsome as Sandro, but she thought him more attractive. They were probably the same age, but Tony was a man. She liked his chin and the strong sweep of his jaw. She smiled when she remembered his laugh. Then she went into the bedroom.

Mona was finishing the last cuff and looked up with cool amusement.

"What happened?" she wanted to know. "It sounded like the League of Nations."

Sherry smiled.

She said, "They wanted an onion. They live a the end. One's Tony and one's Sandro. They're the ones who have three cats and a dog."

Mona said, "Sounds fascinating," and bit off her thread.

Later, when they were in bed, Sherry moved near Mona in the dark.

"Mona—" she began slowly — "don't you think it was funny that Mr. Brothers didn't get out and open the car door for you?"

There was silence for a minute, and in a rush of panic Sherry wondered if Mona was going to be angry. Then Mona's voice came cool and impersonal through the darkness.

She said, "Of course not, darling! It'd been silly in the rain." There was an almost imperceptible pause, then, "After all, you know, a business woman isn't accorded all the little attentions from men she works with."

Sherry closed her eyes.

"That's just it! You work for him. Besides, he knows you know he's married and if you see him—have cocktails and things with him—don't you think he's going to think he can sort of — well, treat you differently?"

There was a silence again. When Mona spoke it was lifeless.

She said, "What you're trying to say is your own morals are, darling, is that he won't respect me. You're right—if I didn't work in his office, if I had a good clothes and a few diamonds and sent my chauffeur home so I could ride with him, he'd have got out to open the door, all right! Well, those are the things I'm going to have! But you've got to start somewhere."

Sherry lay still. Mona had said things like this before, but then there hadn't been any. George Brothers.

She said, "But if you marry some rich man—"

Mona made a little sniffing sound.

"Rich men marry rich girls. You've got to make the grade before you can do that, angel."

Sherry pushed back her chair from the desk and stared at the paper before her. Whatever rhymed with "short"? She had made a list of words that did along the margin of the paper. They began neat, just, first. She had to be careful. Because many words did not suit the spirit of the poem: It was to be a fantasy—the tragedy of a woman who had "lived."

"I live all alone in a castle of dreams." She crossed out "live" and put "dwell." From there on it went quite easily. She changed a word here and there and read it pleasantly. It sounded sad, too heartbroken to be hurt any more. That went with what she had written. Maybe people would read it and wonder at her having suffered so! Well, that was all the boys would think she had "lived."

Sherry didn't seem a lot. She had met Kris too. He was older than Tony and Sandro and at first Sherry had been uncomfortable with him. He was Danish and blond with steely eyes and a long scar down one cheek that he had got from dueling. He had been introduced to her ex Captain Krischopher and Lieutenant Van Rastmann. And he had clicked his heels and bowed stiffly like Tony and had kissed her hand. His manner was arrogant, and he had a way of speaking that was like giving orders.

Sherry had decided he was altogether detestable. "I'm not going to like you!" she thought. But she had.

Tony and Kris came to the door and Sherry called, "Come in."

They had formed a habit of coming in that age if they happened to be home.

Sherry said, "Are you writing a letter?"

Sherry smiled a little sad, sweet smile.

She said, "No. Just a verse."

She sighed and put away her papers, but she left the poem on the desk.

"I'll put the kettle on."

Kris kissed her hand. Sherry had learned to give it with the back up now to be kissed instead of sideways to shake hands. It made her feel like a lady in a drawing room.

Tony stood looking down at the poem.

"Aren't you going to read it to us?" he wanted to know.

Kris said, "Of course she is!" Then to Sherry, "We're a magnificient audience."

Sherry looked a sif she had no such intention but did not want to be rude. She smiled.

She said, "Of course, if you like."

Kris sat down and took Whiskers on his lap. He scratched her jowls and she purred. Sherry read the poem, her voice a little sad and far away. When she had finished, she shrugged a little and tossed the paper on the desk. Kris looked thoughtful.

"It's beautiful," he told her. "Do you write much?"

Sherry smiled.

"Oh, now and then when I feel like it. I'll put the kettle on."

During tea they talked about love. Sherry was a little mysterious, as though she knew a great deal about it. Tony seemed surprised that she did, but Kris looked amused and as though he liked Sherry very much. He was quiet as if he wanted to her her talk. His attitude disturbed her. She changed the subject.

Attlee Defers Nationalization of Steel

Margin of Victory In Party Caucus Only Four Votes

Left-Wingers Say Program "Too Little and Too Late"

London, Aug. 11. — (AP) — Labor Party members of Parliament voted approval today to a decision by Prime Minister Attlee and his Cabinet to defer nationalization of the steel industry, perhaps for the duration of Britain's economic crisis.

A Socialist informant said more than 100 Labor members abstained or front voting at the party caucus. Attlee's margin of victory was only four votes—81 to 77. This action forced recalcitrant members to withdraw a resolution calling upon the government to undertake the steel program at the next session of parliament, opening in October. Labor party Left-Wingers have been attacking Attlee on the ground crisis program was "too little and too late" and his leadership was uninspiring.

One faction called for immediate resumption of trade negotiations with Russia. But Sir Stafford Cripps, president of the Board of Trade, replied that the only contact was up to the Russians. Socialist sources reported after the secret meeting. The trade talks broke down recently when Britain refused to enter negotiations on a war-time credit to Russia.

Wiant Armed, Forces Cut

Other members called for cuts in the armed forces more drastic than Attlee has projected.

Members of the Government said "everything possible" was being done to reduce the army, navy and air forces.

On the steel issue, Government spokesmen told the caucus there was no intention to abandon an election promise to nationalize the mills. They insisted, however, the Cabinet should be free to choose the appropriate time.

Some London newspapers reported earlier that Aneurin Bevan had threatened to resign as minister of health if the government abandoned plans to nationalize iron and steel works.

Amendment Ready.

Later the Government's "crisis bill" was to come up for final action in the House of Commons and Conservatives were ready to push a series of crippling amendments to the measure, which War Prime Minister Winston Churchill last week called "a blank cheque for totalitarians."

The bill would strengthen ar extend government authority, held over from the war, to direct labor into essential industries, take a hand in industries deemed inefficient or otherwise work for a sounder economy.

Parts of Woman's Dismembered Body Found in Detroit

Detroit, Aug. 11. (AP)—The head and legs of a young woman were found by police today two miles apart from an alley almost where other parts of her dismembered body were discovered Sunday.

Wrapped in cloth, the remaining parts of the body were located behind a house by police after a thoughtful search of a six-block square area.

The victim was identified as Senior Inspector John O. Whitman of the homicide said the woman might have been married before she was slain. He said there were punctured wounds in the chest and marks on the right arm indicating she had been tied with a rope. He added the body had been expertly dismembered, apparently with a knife.

Whitman said Harold Kitchen, 36, Mrs. Jean Kitchen, woman's husband Harry Treakl, 50, were being held without charge for questioning in the gruesome slaying.

Kitchen was quoted by the inspector as saying he had last seen Mrs. Treakl Saturday afternoon when she told him "I'm going home to my old man."

Her husband, Whitman said, related he had last seen his wife to whom he was married 12 days ago, at noon Saturday when he said "she got all dressed up and did not come back that night."

VETERANS' HOME OPENED

Amherstburg, Aug. 11 — (CP) — "I wouldn't mind living there myself" were the words of Veterans Minister Mitchell as he officially opened the Bellevue Veterans' Home overlooking the Detroit River here Saturday. Eleven vets are already comfortably settled in the building.

Scientists Seek Mosquito Bites Not in Sport but to Test Sprays

By JACK AVESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Churchill, Man., Aug. 11.—(CP)—Mosquitoes think Churchill is a wonderful town.

Offhand, it's the only place they know of where people sit with bared arms waiting to be bitten and refrain from slapping when the mosquitoes do just that.

For mosquitoes in this area bordering the tundra, such cooperation means something, because the insects here are much larger than the garden varieties which infect the more southern parts of Canada, and consequently they need more blood.

However, most of the mosquitoes don't know it this situation won't last.

The men who sit wistfully in the muskeg country waiting for the mosquitoes to bite aren't doing it for fun.

They're members of the entomological branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture and their task is to discover by what means the insects can best be repelled.

Headed by Dr. C. R. Twinn of Ottawa — their work dubbed "operation mosquito" — the entomologists are trying to work the northern mosquitoes up to the stage where they'll shun all human companionship.

Their experiments start simply . . . but hardly. To test an area for effectiveness of various insect sprays they expose themselves to the mosquitoes without any protection. After a certain period they count the number of bites on their bared arms.

Then the area is sprayer with an insecticide. The entomologists again offer their bared arms to the mosquitoes and the number of bites is checked again.

A comparison of the number of bites will indicate the effect the insecticides have been revealed and the effectiveness of the spray used.

In time, the entomologists hope they will have the mosquito problem solved to the point where fishermen on northern lakes will be able to fish in peace.

But until such time as the entomologists have completed their findings the mosquitoes think that the whole thing is so much sport.

They're enjoying it more than the scientists are.

ODOM SMASHES ALL AROUND WORLD RECORDS

Time for 19,645-Mile Solo Trip 73 Hours, 5 Minutes, 11 Seconds; Seeks New Record

Chicago, Aug. 11 — (AP)—Pilot Jim Odom said today that he would try it again after setting a new record for the fastest trip around the world.

The 27-year-old veteran flier broke all previous globe-girdling records as he buzzed the Douglas airport municipal terminal yesterday just 73 hours, five minutes and 11 seconds after leaving Chicago Thursday on his 19,645-mile solo trip.

"The Good Lord was taking care of me for a while last night," Odom said, explaining that he had dozed off from fatigue over the mountains of Northwestern Canada and awakened to daylight flashing toward a 10,000-foot mountain peak.

Despite failure of an automatic pilot, lack of gas near the end of the trip, and extreme weariness, Odom, with his converted Army B-26 bomber, the Reynold Bombshell, broke all existing records. These included the former solo record set in 1933 by the late Wiley Post, of 186 hours and 49 minutes, and the previous flight of the Bombshell with Adcon, Miller Reynolds, Chicago aircraft manufacturer, and flight engineer T. Frank Hanley, who made the trip in 78 hours, 55 minutes last April.

Averages 269 Miles Hour

Odom's average speed for the flight, including nine hours and 50 minutes on the ground, was approximately 269 miles an hour but during the 62 hours and 15 minutes of flying he was averaged 310.59 miles an hour.

Franklin Gunn, Douglas flight manager, said the youthful aircraft would enter the Bendix races at Cleveland Aug. 30 and is planning another global flight in the Cessna Corsair scientists and reporters aboard.

"I'm convinced the-world trip will be the hard way — via the Poles" — Odom said.

The record trip just ended carried a U. S. p. m. EDT Thursday with stops at Gander, Newfoundland, Paris, Cairo, Karachi and Calcutta, India; Tokyo, Anchorage, Alaska; Fargo, N. D.; and back to Chicago at 5:11 P. M. EDT Sunday. Three minutes later Odom landed at the Chicago Municipal airport, 22 miles south of his starting point.

The climactic act of his plane clean-shaven and smiling, as if he had returned from a pleasure jaunt, not a gruelling flight of over three nearly sleepless days.

He was greeted by his Ontario born wife who cried: "You look wonderful," his two children, Ronnie, three, and Sandra, six, and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Odom, of Chicago City along with Mayor Martin H. Kennelly of Chicago and thousands of cheering spectators.

The engineer and fireman of the International Limited were killed Sunday evening when the engine and eight coaches were derailed as the train was coming into Kingston station yard. Red about 7.30 p.m. EDT.

Ontario Forestry Report Urges Drastic Changes In Timber-Cutting

Toronto, Aug. 11 (CP) — The government and citizens of Ontario today had before them the report of the Royal Commission under Mai.-Gen. Howard Kennedy which after 14 months' hearings in many parts of Ontario recommended sweeping changes in forestry operation.

With a warning that if nothing is done to stop the present wasteful use of forests resources the lumber trade will be a minor industry in a generation, the commissioner's main recommendation was for establishment of 12 forest operating companies with sole right to timber in Ontario.

Shares in such companies would be held by the paper manufacturers sawmill operators and other timber cutters who for years have engaged in fierce competition for forest rights. The suggested forest operating companies would do all the cutting, supplying the timber to the Hare-owning interests. The report recommends that the government appoint one director on the board of each of the forest operating companies.

Reorganization of the Ontario Lands and Forest Department and thorough revision of the laws and regulations pertaining to the forestry branch of government were also urged in the report which was described in a foreword by Premier Drew of Ontario as "an important milestone in the history of forestry in the Province."

Recommendations Made.

These were the recommendations concerning the department:

1. Combining the existing seven regions into three zones, western, central and southern, each under an assistant deputy minister.

2. Establishment of the present 11 departmental divisions into two groups, each headed by an assistant deputy minister.

3. Consolidation of 11 existing acts concerning administration, protection and utilization of Crown lands and forests.

In its 796 pages, the report covered every phase of Ontario's forest industry including such points as preserving the woods of porcupines and establishing reforestation areas for lumberjacks.

Experimentation with helicopters in forest fire control and transportation of 2,500,000 acres in Southern Ontario at an annual cost of $2,250,000 also was recommended.

The waste resulting from uncoordinated independent operations was "the most striking impression" gained by the commission in its tour throughout the province, said the report.

It noted illogical allotment of limits in contiguous areas rather

HUGHES PREDICTS INQUIRY WILL NOT BE RESUMED

Reasons Given by Committee for Postponement Termed "Ridiculous"

Washington, Aug. 11 (AP)—The United States Senate inquiry into Howard Hughes' wartime plane contracts was halted abruptly today, and Hughes predicted it will never be resumed.

Chairman Homwer Ferguson (Rep., Mich.) of the War Contracts Investigating Sub-Committee, conducting the inquiry, simply announced after a closed session of the group that it had decided to defer hearings until Nov. 17.

He gave two reasons:

Other demands on the Senators' time, including plans several have for trips abroad.

Inability to locate John W. Meyer, free-spending publicity man for Hughes.

But Hughes, smiling broadly, told the reporters:

"I don't really think the hearings will be reopened."

The Hollywood film producer and plane builder, also told reporters he thought the reason the committee gave for postponement was "ridiculous."

Can't Locate Meyer

A subpoena directing that Meyer appear before the committee for further testimony was issued last week, but committee aides have been unable to locate the publicity man.

The decision to call of the hearings for the time being left incomplete Hughes' own story of his dealings with the government on $40,000,000 of war contracts.

His testimony thus far has been largely about the 200-ton flying boat he built under an $18,000,000 government contract.

Ferguson on the contract for F-11 photo-reconnaissance planes, late model of a type which has been sketchy, and has not death at length with his relations with Elliott Roosevelt.

The committee previously has heard that Hughes got the contract for this plane after Roosevelt "personally intervened" with the United States air corps buy it although government experts were opposed.

Senator Claude Pepper (Dem.-Fla.) told a reporter he has asked that General H. H. Arnold, former Air Corps chief, and Carl Spaatz, present commander, be summoned for testimony in the inquiry into Hughes' $40,000,000 contracts for a 200-ton flying boat and three photo-reconnaissance planes.

Pepper said he wants to establish primarily the need for the International Limited Leaves Rails at Curve at Kingston

Kingston, Aug. 11 (CP)—The engineer and fireman were scalded to death and five persons were slightly injured when the Ottawa section of the Canadian National Railways' fast west-bound International Limited left the tracks just east of Kingston station last night.

Cause of the derailment was not known. Responsibility inflicted as to the speed the train was travelling when the locomotive left the rails and plowed on its side along the shallow Kingston station platform while dozens of waiting passengers scurried to safety. Pails in the confusion accounted for some of the slight burns suffered.

Dead were the engineer, Biard B. Embury, of the Kingston yard, Belleville, and the fireman Charles Henry White of 20 Hillcrest Ave., Belleville. Engineer Benjamin Shier of Belleville suffered minor burns.

The 12-car train was coming into the station stop when the engine left the rails at the far end over on its side. It wound up on the platform in front of the station building with five steam driving inside the station and leaving pools of water on the floor.

Some of the passengers said on arrival at Toronto later that the train was not going more than 40 miles an hour when it rounded the curve approaching the Kingston station. But George Brown who operates a service station near the tracks, said the train seemed to be going between 60 and 70 miles an hour with the whistle blowing continuously.

Probably Mechanical Trouble

Clarence Best of Toronto, driving car waiter on the train, said: "We must have been going better than 60 miles an hour when we were wrecked. Think there must have been mechanical trouble or something because we were thrown from our seats. We could hear the conductor and engineer signalling back and forth on the cord."

A total of eight coaches also left the rails. Injured passengers, all

Toronto, Aug. 11 — (CP) — Two hundred passengers from the Ottawa to Toronto International Limited derailed at Kingston last night with the death of the fireman and engineer reached Toronto Union Station early today, none of them suffering any more than bruises.

Their main complaint was hunger — they said they had no food at Kingston during the three-hour delay there prior to the trip to Toronto. Here, however, railway officials were waiting to shepherd them into Pullmans and dining cars pending inspecting trains were to spend the night. A meal was ready for them.

All the passengers left the train a small army of redcaps willed to carry their baggage, for which service no tips were accepted.

One passenger, Miss Maisie Newton of Toronto, said the derailment at first seemed like an explosion as the wheels stopped screaming.

Miss Newton, formerly employed by the Thamnis Press, said front coaches had been thrown beyond the locomotive which was overturned at the edge of the platform.

In Terrible Mess

"Everything was a terrible mess," said the pretty, dark-haired girl. Steam obscured most of the station and the figures of hundreds of bewildered people hurrying by be seen in the mist. She was standing on the platform when she saw the bodies of the engineer and fireman were removed.

Another passenger, Miss Phyllis Carey of Toronto, said she had just an excitement when the coach in which she was riding went flying off the rails. This was echoed by trainman M. Jarvis of Brockville, who said: "Everything went well here up to the cause of the accident."

Ashwell Gray of Hamilton, who was in the last of the derailed coaches, said: "Could think were the going at about 40 miles an hour. It seemed as though they had just run into the brakes. We didn't get shaken up very badly in our coach."

Leo Conlin of Ottawa, travelling with his wife and two children, were in the second dining car. "The train ahead of us is coming in normally," he said. "Then it started to bump. Dishes began to hit the floor and so did many of the diners."

Weather Synopsis

Another warm bright day is in store for most of Ontario today. Forecasts issued early this morning over all except the White River area call for sunny skies. Some areas considerable cloudiness and scattered thunderstowers are expected. A severe storm, or tropical disturbance, which is moving very slowly eastward.

New Forest Fire, Whipped by Wind, Out of Control

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Aug. 11 (CP)—An "increasingly worse" forest fire covering more than 75 acres of slash timber 155 miles northwest of here burned out of control today whipped by a new wind and continued dry weather.

The blaze, 25 miles west of Wawa, and a new one in the Missisagi area north of Blind River were described by Dudley Forestry A. W. Leman as "the worst this year." He expressed fears that the Missisagi fire could reserve 1,000 acres of slash timber.

"We are getting no help at all from the weather," said Mr. Leman. "Fresh west winds today give little hope in either of the two major fires. There are now 23 bush fires in this division although most of them are under control."

H.F.G. Bridges, Minister Of Fisheries, Dies

Ottawa, Aug. 11 (CP)—H. F. G. Bridges, Canada's Fisheries Minister and at 46 one of the youngest men in the cabinet where he represented his native Maritimes, died suddenly in an Ottawa hospital Sunday, of an unsuspected heart condition.

The death of the tall, lawyer-statesman-soldier, who went into the cabinet almost directly from the army less than two years ago and who was tipped as the "man of a fast-rising political career" left the capital stunned and shocked.

Last night Prime Minister Mackenzie King issued a tribute reviewing Mr. Bridges' career in the provincial legislature of New Brunswick where he was speaker for two years and later in the federal field. The Prime Minister said in his death, Canada had lost one of the most promising of her younger men "a public life and one the Commonwealth "one of the bravest and best of her sons."

German Military Defeat Total Indicate Captured Army Papers

By RICHARD TOMPKINS

London, Aug. 11.—(AP)—Utter military defeat brought about the downfall of the Third Reich, a British Admiralty report said today basing its conclusions on captured documents it said "are of value forever the legend of an unconquerable German Army."

"Germany suffered total military defeat, and there was no possibility of scratching that defeat to anything like a military conquest," the report says.

"The revolt (against Hitler) of July 20 (1944) was attempted before the end and there were in fact no generals to mobilize to make possible any future soldiers' stab in the back legend of Wehrmacht."

The report is based on documents which detail the "Fuehrer conferences" between Hitler and his staff in the final weeks of the war. The papers were among the German naval archives captured by British and American intelligence officers, and contained a day-to-day account of confusion and panic in the German high command.

In early 1945, when shortages of coal, manpower and oil made Germany's situation impossible.

"A comparison of these last four months with the period immediately preceding the Italian collapse shows how much the German high command has deteriorated," says the report.

"At the beginning of 1945, Hitler's ability had deteriorated, and they showed that he had lost his sense of viewing the war situation as a whole.

"Where one would expect to find an acceptance of military defeat leading to surrender being made for guerrilla warfare and underground activity in the background, there are instead nothing but wishful thinking and schemes.

"The conferences give a clear picture of Hitler and his staff, adrift in the face of a situation they could no longer control, and so harassed that they could not think beyond the immediate requirements of battle."

STIRLING RESIDENT HOOKS 22¼-POUND LUNGE IN TRENT R.

Taking his wife and five-year-old son for a boat ride on the Trent River two miles north and west of Stirling, Burt Bell had the satisfaction of landing a 22¼-lb. muskinonge on Saturday night. Mr. Bell, who fishes in these waters quite regularly, was not out in anticipation of catching a big one but rather out for a ride to get away from the oppressive heat. Just for fun a Lucky Strike lure with a frog attached was thrown out and it was not long before the big fellow struck with the results as stated. It is stated that the fish broke water several times and was a pretty sight. The muskie put up quite a spirited fight but hauled into the boat twenty minutes after being hooked. "My wife and son were quite excited but behaved exceedingly well in the boat," said Mr. Bell.

Police Blotter

A thief, or thieves, unknown entered the hall of the Army and Navy Veterans on Front Street, sometime early Sunday morning and made off with $40 or $50 in silver. The cash register was not tilted and it is not certain just how much loot was taken by the thieves.

An investigation disclosed that the only door unbolted was the one leading into the bar. This is the second time in decent weeks that this hall has been robbed.

The Belleville police reported that a black, 1936, Oldsmobile sedan, bearing license No. 4338, was stolen from that town on Saturday night and asked that the local police be on the lookout for it.

Several cases of careless driving were reported with the motorists being charged at the station. Most of the charges were laid because speeding or neglecting to stop at intersections so marked.

Annual Ciaco Picnic Held At the Outlet

For the first time in nearly half a decade employees past and present attended with their families, on Saturday, the Canadian Industrial Alcohol Company annual picnic. A convoy of seven buses leaving Foxboro provided transportation for the greater portion of the four hundred present, the remainder motoring to the Outlet.

Within the hour people were arriving at The Outlet and commencing the program of competitive events, a full day of sporting events that had the pleasant program in working order in quick time. Competitive events for children were two o-eighty-two, wars soon entertaining their less ambitious neighbours. Baseball, canoe races, swimming and just plain lolling about were the order of the afternoon.

Everyone capable of convincing Mother Nature to cut drill to see their sixteenth summer obtained 50 cents worth of ticket-redeemable for refreshments. A nearby canteen for everything from soft drinks to ice cream. Prizes under two were each presented with a box of candy. Children over two six four received a pail and shovel, and immediately began refurbishing the landscape. Each participant received a souvenir ribbon. Each successful employee was the recipient of one leading ball bat. This the second time in decent weeks that this hall has been robbed.

The following prizes reported that a black, 1936, Oldsmobile sedan, bearing license No. 4338, was stolen from that town on Saturday night and asked that the local police be on the lookout for it.

Several cases of careless driving were reported with the motorists being charged at the station. Most of the charges were laid because speeding or neglecting to stop at intersections so marked.

Meyer sought for additional tasks and Doenitz expressed astonishment at Meyer's desire to serve in the army. Meyer burst out angrily that practically total for the

Ontario Cheese Producers Hear Farewell Address by Sec'y. Joss

Mr. Stanley L. Joss, who has been Secretary-Manager of the Ontario Cheese Producers for several years, recently severed his connection with that group. Today at a meeting of the Association held in Toronto, Mr. Joss gave his farewell address in which he summarized some of his experiences in the dairy business. He also gave expression to some opinions as possible future problems that may be faced by cheese producers of the province.

Following is the text of his address:

"This will probably be my last appearance among you in any official capacity. I am, therefore, speaking "in your own name and in a secondary interest in the welfare of your Association, and if I should indulge in that unpopular but rather common practice of giving advice, I am sure you will accept what I have to say in the same spirit as it is given.

"My services to the Ontario Cheese Producers' Association date ten years before the beginning of your organization. I served from 1926 to 1934 as secretary of the United Dairymen Co-operative and as such was well known throughout the Province. I have, therefore, served the cheese producers of this Province for a period of twenty-three years and I feel that at this time I owe it to you to review briefly my experience, with special emphasis on the points that I believe are of interest and value to you.

Constructive Prescription

"Before getting into my subject I wofld point out that my talk is not so much for you men but rather for the producer who has not the privilege of attending meetings such as this, and who depends solely upon press reports and local meetings for his information. Speaking about press reports, let me say that one of the outstanding features about them, which you must always realize and appreciate, is that they criticize as well as praise your efforts. The press has an uncanny faculty of ferreting out our weaknesses and is ever pointed ways of disclosing them to us. This is good, and even when it hurts, it is still good.

"This organization, which has been built up by your efforts, the efforts of the men who preceded you in office, and the loyalty of your members, is a good organization. The work accomplished has been progressive; it has brought many benefits to its members, and has to a very large degree established the cheese industry as a basic one of the Canadian dairy industry, on a much higher plane than it enjoyed prior to the formation of the Cheese Producers' Association. This has been brought about because of your presentations and dealings with governments, with cheese dealers or the cheese trade, and with other farm organizations, you have shown tolerance and respect for their respective view-points. That is not always an easy thing to do. It is very often much easier to be intolerant in our dealings with others because by so being we can blame others for our mistakes and hereby temporarily escape our responsibilities.

Great Opportunities

"Your activities can be tremendously wide or you can limit their scope. There is a wide field in the practical and scientific side of dairy farming. There is that phase of the industry that has to do with improving the quality of your product. There is a great work to be done in getting better cheese factories, for which substantial government assistance will be granted. These things and many more are of a most important character. On the other side, you have the commercial aspect of your industry, such as the buying and selling of cheese; the handling of factory supplies; the establishing of grading centres for cheese, and no doubt many other projects.

"To develop a program that will bring about good results requires not only a great deal of accurate information, but all information must be properly appraised and analyzed in the light of its value to your own particular case. It must then be used not only wisely but discreetly in order that you may have the fullest possible support from your members.

Information On Hand

"All the information you require for the planning of a policy is on record in your head office. A study of reports of your annual meetings will bear that out. Each year you have had speakers on your program who have been leading men in respective fields. Their addresses have been of a high calibre and have been indicative of considerable thought and preparation. Reports from your own officers have also been of the Association's endeavors and experiments. I feel sure that the material recorded in these reports can be the safest guide to a sound and progressive program for your organization that is now available.

"Your association is in a healthy financial position, which, next to the loyalty of your members and good management by your officers, is your greatest asset. You should guard it carefully but not niggardly. The money you have accumulated and the tolls you are collecting must be used for the benefit of your industry. You will find that fixing income is not exactly a happy position to be in, particularly when the money is not yours to do with as you see fit, but rather you are not just the custodian, but you are the one who has to determine how the money should be spent.

"Many schemes will be presented to you that would, if put into operation, soon make serious inroads on your reserves. It is amazing how plausible these schemes can be presented, even when they are most impractible. To deal with such things requires good judgment based upon sound advice and authentic information.

Decisions Must Be Faced

"You will have differences of opinion which at times will take on a most controversial character. It will require great patience on the part of your leaders, coupled to a determination to face and get what has been determined upon by the majority provided of course the majority have given the matter full consideration. To go forward you will find that important decisions will have to be made quite frequently; they will be the rule rather than the exception. You will find that they cannot be put off but must be dealt with as they arise. They will be part of your business and you are responsible to deal with them.

"In closing let me say this. I believe you will continue to go forward. You have shown that you can choose your leaders wisely, as the men who have headed your organization have always been able to stand up to their tests and take their place in any meeting in such a way that they have been a credit to you all. Place your confidence in the men you choose as your leaders; give them your best support and then expect from them the results and I am sure you will not be disappointed."

ONTARIO FORESTRY

than conforming with watersheds, which often prevented economical development of wood-producing land. A widely-expanded road program was recommended so that every major watershed may be opened up.

Hydro Criticized

"In many instances, timber areas held by operators have little relation to the present needs of the units of industry concerned," it said. Such haphazard allocation would see extinction of certain areas due to lack of timber in periods of time "ranging from two to 25 years."

Strong criticism was voiced of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, which the report said "has not applied ordinary forest conservation practice on most of its major projects which has resulted in considerable loss of timber."

On the aspect the report recommended penalties where stumps are left greater than 12 inches high, that the tops of trees of too great diameter are removed, and where material is felled but not delivered for measurement.

Should Control Cutting

Controlled cutting should allow continued growth of young timber, it said. There should be charges for merchantable logs used as skids but not removed after operations and there should be penalties for cutting immature trees.

On fish and wild life, the report recommended stricter enforcement of regulations on licences and institution of a full research program into such problems as the gradual disappearance of moose, the effect of stream pollution on fish, and the effect of birds in controlling forest insects. Four forest experimental areas are suggested to serve as training grounds for members of the forest administrative staff.

The report also would furnish fire-protection personnel, the report suggested.

It included also a recommendation for a "more reasonable" wage structure for forest workers, with provision of betterering conditions for bush workers.

Egyptian Demands Argued Before Security Council

Lake Success, Aug. 11 —(AP)— Britain and Egypt squared off for another verbal battle today as the United Nations Security Council resumed its debate on Egyptian demands that British troops get off her soil.

Premier Nokrashy Pasha, personally representing his country on an issue which he says will determine Egypt's future, was ready to stress anew Egyptian claims that British troops were in the strategic Mediterranean country against the wishes of its people.

British Sir Alexander Cadogan drafted his rebuttal speech around the 30-year-old Anglo-Egyptian treaty signed in 1936 and covering the presence of troops.

Britain maintains that the pact still is in force and the charges should be dismissed. Egypt holds that the pact has been voided by provisions of the U.N. Charter and other international agreements.

The other point of the complaint hinges around the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, from which Egypt also seeks to oust British forces. The area now is jointly administered by the two countries.

The council also was expected to hear Russia's views on whether she could discuss any of the various compromise measures suggested for ending Balkan disorders. That goes back on the council floor tomorrow morning regardless of the Soviet decision.

Paris Radio reported Syria, council chairman, outlined a busy week for the delegates. After warming up with the Egyptian and Britain cases, they will turn to Indonesia tomorrow afternoon.

Developments in the Pacific case included the release from Indonesian republic to be heard and word from Batavia that representatives also would come here from East Indonesia, North Borneo and the Chinese community.

The rest of the estate was bequeathed to Charles K. Forrest of Petrolia, Ont., described in Mrs. Morris' will as a clergyman. Bradshaw's affidavit says that Forrest filed the will for probate.

Launch Motor Explodes, Causing Burns to 2 Girls

Sudbury, Aug. 11 (CP) — Two girls were in hospital here today with second degree burns following the explosion of a launch motor in Bay of Islands, 75 miles southwest of here on Lake Huron's north channel. The girls' parents and another were unhurt.

The four were returning to camp Sunday from Whitefish Falls when the explosion occurred. They variously were Joan Groom, 17, with burns all over her body; Loretta Lentz, nine suffered burns about the legs and hips.

When the blast took place Mrs. Don Groom, who was running the boat, was with Billy and Lois in the cabin and they had to climb through a window to escape the flames. Joan, sitting at the rear of the boat, was severely burned, in the explosion, and thrown into the water.

Fortunately George McIntyre was passing in another boat and he rescued the family. They were taken to a nearby summer camp and given emergency treatment before being brought here. The girls' condition is described as fair this morning after Joan received plasma.

Peril in Traffic

"Fatalities statistics do not tell the whole story of peril in traffic," remarks the New York Times, noting that traffic deaths are down a little as compared with last year in New York, but accidents are more numerous.

The Times refers to the state of danger in which motorists are through the actions of certain drivers. The writer notes, that "every accident, in view of the forces set up even at moderate car speeds has the potential of death or serious injury." Then comes the remark, "It is only good fortune they do not occurr. Every driver knows the experience of being in a near-accident many times a year. If he has taken no chances himself, he has seen others take them by the dozen — passing at blind corners or on hills, trying to beat a light, pulling out of line in angry impatience when there is no proper opportunity to get back in without endangering other cars travelling in both directions. When this happens too often — as it does — the result is tragedy. Lifetimes are lost to save seconds."

Drivers should realize their duty to the law is to drive with care in view of conditions and to obey all traffic regulations which were made for safety of all people who use the roads. Drivers have a double responsibility, to others as well as to themselves. Traffic toll contains the names of persons who break the regulations and also the names of many innocent victims of their actions.

Fortunately there appears to be a lessening of fatalities. It may be in part due to the stress which is planted upon the necessity of safe driving by every agency having to do with the use of the road and highways. That this will continue is to be hoped because there is a long way to go before the time when deaths from accident on roads may be rare. In time it may be that the public conscience will be so potent as to make that possible. It is the ideal worth aiming at so that those inclined to be reckless or inconsiderate may be made to feel their responsibility to drive safely.

At times people cannot help wondering what are the chances of one being the victim of an accident through the mistake, inattention or carelessness of another. There is, as the Times says, "peril in traffic." Will that day come when it may be said "there is no peril in traffic?" In driving the personal factor plays no small part in safety or lack of safety.

British Agriculture

When World War II broke out, agriculture was still the largest industry of Britain, occupying 70 per cent of the land area of England and Wales and providing employment, directly or indirectly, for over one million people. Yet Britain was producing only one-third of the food she consumed, says "Agriculture in Britain." Her agriculture was unbalanced with the arable farming area sunk to 12,000,000 acres, the lowest in history, while the number of dairy cattle, sheep, pigs and poultry had never been higher. So imports of between seven and eight million tons of feeding stuffs annually were required — one out of every three tons of food consumed by animals being imported. This was a major problem when the last war broke out and faced British farmers with the greatest task ever set before them. Food for the people had to be curtailed by drastic control of consumption and there was a maximum increase in the home-grown food. Livestock was given the priority in arable land. Hence milk became priority No. 1 and foodstuffs were placed on this basis, while milk was subsidized. Everything possible was done to help the farmer, 478 district bodies working under war agricultural committee in the British counties. In 1940 Britain closed many peacetime agricultural colleges and sent experts out into the fields to spread the new ideas and teach the farmers new methods. One of the results was a farm survey in 1940. Labor shortage became one of the worst problems. Farming was a reserved occupation but even so about 40,000 farmers went into the armed service or industry. Minimum wage was fixed and men were "frozen" as farm workers. The Women's Land Army was recruited to 70,000 strong. Startling advances were made in machinery, two thirds of which was manufactured in Britain.

The result is today that British agriculture is now one of the most highly mechanized in the world. All these measures led Britain to produce 70 per cent of her wartime rations even though her population was greatly increased through the arrival of Allied armies and refugees from the Continent of Europe.

Peace coming, there was the beginning of world shortage of food. The cause was droughts in many of the world's main producing areas in the harvest season of 1945 to be added to the problems of dislocation of economy and trade.

Co-operation which grew up in the war years and experience so gained between the farmer and the government have greatly aided agriculture.

"Hymn to Joy"

Among the quiet New England hills the other night, under the lonely reaches of the stars, the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven loosed its splendor on the air.

People far from the scene of the Berkshire Music Festival — in city rooms, on suburban porches — heard over their radios the Boston Symphony Orchestra bringing the mighty symphony to its triumphant last movement, where the chorus joins the instruments in proclaiming through Schiller's "Hymn to Joy" the blessed and universal brotherhood of man.

During the last war a young anti-Nazi German girl wrote a letter to American friends which was smuggled out of Germany. In it she told of listening to her radio to the Vienna Philharmonic playing the Beethoven Ninth. When the chorus joined in the Schiller hymn, she wrote, they seemed to "sing from the bottom of their hearts, as though they were expressing the deepest longings of all the people of the earth for peace."

That was in the midst of total war. The other night it was in the midst of uneasy atomic peace. The same stars looked down —the stars that spoke to Schiller of a loving Father's reign.

The young anti-Nazi wrote that she wept as she listened, yet felt in her heart the joy of knowing that the law of brotherhood could not be forever hidden by the anarchy of war. Did any troubled heart the other night reach out through the botched, unhappy peace of today to the exultant joy that created the Ninth Symphony and that ordered the shining architecture of the stars?

In spite of the stupid slumbers and nightmares of men, reality breaks through to listening hearts, says Christian Science Monitor.

Science Can be Merciful

Dentists will soon have at their disposal a new local anaesthetic, called "topocaine," which does away with the need for using the needle. The dentist applies the topocaine with a cotton pellet to flood the cavity, then drills or extracts.

This is good news for a suffering world.

Lately we have been wondering whether scientists were doing much in the way of research outside of figuring out better atomic bombs, faster rockets with bigger warheads, and stuff like that.

To come across an item in the newspapers which indicates that they are also concerned with making this a better world for those with toothaches (which means all of us) to live in, restores some of our faith in researchers. Only a little while ago, we were going around muttering to ourselves: "Is science really necessary?" If it'll help toothaches, perhaps it is. — Montreal Star Herald.

Taking No Chances

R. M. Harrison in the Windsor Star says that Windsor hasn't had one polio case this year, but warns that "we must keep our fingers crossed of course" adding that the next two weeks should tell the tale. He gives this wholesome advice, "every symptom remotely resembling those of infantile paralysis should receive immediate medical attention. One neglected case can start an epidemic and blast what is shaping up as an unusual health record."

LETTER XVI

Beloved, we're out at the cottage. The cheeks of the children are tanned.
I wonder if ever you've seen them these summer days romping the sand.
Little Jane in her sun suit is lovely. She talks like a youngster of five,
And Edgar and Ellen already have started to learn how to dive.

Beloved, the girls have re-covered the pillows for couches and chairs,
And the screen, I am sure you remember, that stood at the foot of the stairs.
The flag at the doorway is flying from dawn to the set of the sun;
And, as far as we can, we are doing the way that you wanted things done.

Beloved, remember you told us to laugh and have fun as we should.
Now, recalling your smile as you said it,
so often I wish that I could.
I join in the fun as you bade me; I laugh when a story is told;
But it isn't the fun you once shared in,
and it isn't the laughter of old.

INFORMATION ROUNDUP

Why is Minnesota called the Gopher State?

The animal from which Minnesota gets its nickname is the common ground squirrel, which is very numerous in that section and which is popularly called a gopher in the Middlewest.

"Gopher" is applied to so many different creatures in America that the term without qualification is of little help in distinguishing animals and reptiles. The truth of this assertion can easily be demonstrated by asking a dozen persons from different parts of the country what a gopher is and seeing the wide discrepancy in their replies.

The underlying idea in "gopher" seems to be "burrowing." The term is generally supposed to be derived from French "gaufre," honeycomb, and to have been first applied to certain small burrowing animals by the French Canadians who fancied that the burrows resembled honeycombs. "Wafer" and "waffle" are believed to come in a roundabout way from the same source. "Gopher" is an Americanism, but there is an old English word from the same source, "goffer," which means to flute or crimp, as cloth or lace.

In Florida "gopher" is applied to an edible land turtle, while elsewhere in the Southeast the term is applied to the Indigo snake, possibly because it often takes refuge in the holes of gopher tortoises and other burrowing creatures. Popular nomenclature is further confused by the fact that in the Southeast the pocket gopher is often called a "salamander," a term restricted elsewhere to amphibians.

In different parts of the country "gopher" is applied locally to all sorts of rodents — ground squirrels, prairie dogs, marmots and chipmunks, all of which are related to the tree squirrels. Thus we have the "picket-pin gopher," the "scrub gopher" and the "striped gopher." All of these are ground squirrels or "spermophiles," seed lovers.

Some authorities insist that "gopher" should not be applied to any of the many species of ground squirrels, but should be reserved for the pocket gopher, which is an entirely different type of rodent. Pocket gophers live underground like moles and throw up heaps of earth here and there above their burrows. They are vegetarians and do considerable damage by eating the roots of plants and by starting erosion. The name of the animal is suggested by the fact that each cheek is provided with an external hair-lined pouch in which the gopher carries food to its subterranean storehouses.

Contrary to a popular notion, these gophers do not transport dirt from place to place in their pockets. These animals can travel in their burrows almost as fast backwards as forward. The prairies of western Washington are dotted with mounds believed to have been formed by countless generations of pocket gophers. These mounds are round or oval in shape, from 10 to 40 feet in diameter, from one to seven feet high, and are known as "Mima mounds," from Mima Prairie in Thurston County, Washington, where they are largest and most numerous.

USE SPONGE IRON

Washington, Aug. 11 (AP) — The United States Bureau of Mines said today it has successfully employed old-fashioned sponge iron as a substitute for scrap iron and an aid in the production of high quality steel. In an emergency, the Bureau said, sponge iron could be put into production almost immediately, using available equipment such as brick plants or cement kilns.

25 Accidental Deaths Recorded During Weekend

(By The Canadian Press)

Holiday outings contributed largely to the toll of 25 accidental deaths recorded by The Canadian Press in eastern Canada as urban dwellers sought to escape the continuing heat wave by flocking to lakeshore resorts and the open countryside.

Drownings and highway fatalities headed the list, each claiming seven victims. Two persons died from falls and two were burned to death, while the engineer and fireman of a Montreal-Toronto express train were killed when their engine and eight cars left the track at Kingston Sunday night.

Five others died from a variety of causes:

One person was electrocuted, one was shot in the heart, a driver was killed when thrown from his racing sulky and a Northern Ontario miner perished in an underground cave-in. Cause of a death which occurred in a Stratford, Ont., jail cell was not established.

Fifteen of the fatalities were in Ontario, five in Quebec and five in Nova Scotia. New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island reported none.

When a six-passenger automobile and a loaded sand truck crashed headon Saturday night near Granby, Que., three persons in the car were killed and another three injured. Dead were the driver, Alvri Leclerc, 30, of St. Valerien, Jeanine Beauvais, 23, and Lucie Delormie, 21, born at Granby. The driver of the truck and a passenger escaped injury.

Other traffic victims were Gerald Hubley, 47, killed in a car-truck collision at Sheet Harbor, N.E.; Romeo Young 37, at Crowland, Ont., when a New York Central train struck a car Saturday night; Mrs. Lillian Oldfield, at Simcoe, Ont., after a head-on car collision Sunday in which four others were injured; and 14-year-old Robert Dufour when a truck left the road in Malden township, Ont.

Dragged by Current

Murray Jackson, 18, swimming just 35 feet from shore in three feet of water, was drowned Sunday at Rondeau Park when a strong current dragged him out into Lake Erie. Also drowned while swimming, were 17-year-old Jean Labelle, in Lake Alouette near St. Jerome, Que., and Fernand Peterson in the Ottawa River while on a picnic outing near Ottawa, both on Sunday.

Drowned Near Kingston

Fishermen who fell from their boats to death were Cecil Morton, 22, near Kingston in Lake Ontario, and Thomas Dwyer, from London, Ont., in Georgian Bay near Lion's Head. At Delhi, Ont., the body of John Guba, 53 was found floating in a creek and at Parrsboro, N. S., Mrs. Havelock McCully, 47, was drowned in a river 350 yards from her home.

Chris B. Hall, 49, was burned to death in a boathouse at London, Ont., Saturday night when a basin of gasoline he was carrying smashed an overhanging light bulb and burst into flames showering him with fire. At South Bar, N. S., Michael MacNeil, 29, perished in a fire which levelled his home.

Killed in the train derailment at Kingston were Engineer B. D. Embury and Fireman C. H. White, both of Belleville, when their engine overturned.

Falls from Window

In remarkably similar accidents in two different parts of the country, Allan McLeod, 43, died in a Toronto hospital after falling from his third-storey window Sunday, and at Halifax, Chung Wong, 66, was killed when he fell 25 feet from a second-storey window of his home.

Norman Milne, 33, died almost instantly with a bullet in his heart when a revolver discharged during a scuffle with another man in a restaurant at Cartierville, near Montreal. The two men were struggling for possession of the weapon following an argument.

Victim of a rock burst at the 4,000-foot level of the Lake Shore mine at Kirkland Lake was Lucien Chouinard, 22-year-old miner while in another industrial accident, William Bastien, 19, was electrocuted at Windsor while attempting to repair a damaged electric wire.

At Digby, N. S., Leonard White died in a freakish mishap when he was thrown from his racing sulky, and at Stratford, Ont., George Glasser, 55, was found dead two hours after being arrested on a drunkenness charge. An inquest into his death is likely, officials said.

4 INSPECTORS DEMOTED

New York, Aug. 11 (AP) — Police Commissioner Arthur W. Wallander yesterday demoted four inspectors to the rank of Captain and transferred 20 other police officers as the anti-gambling drive continued in full swing. The commissioner said one of the demotions definitely was connected with the drive but declined to comment on the other three except to say they were "in the interests of the department."

NO MORE "REMOVABLE" SNAPPERS?

Proponent of a new dental technique which he claims eventually will eliminate the necessity for bridgework, Dr. Stephen A. Ferlita examines the teeth of a patient. Mrs. J. P. Sansone, of Atlanta. Dr. Ferlita, who has practiced in Atlanta 21 years, reported that abscessed and rotten teeth may be extracted, cleaned and rebuilt and replaced in the mouth. He has been performing the operation since last September.

FOOD FOR A GOOD COMPLEXTION

The professor of dermatology (structure function, hygiene, diagnosis and treatment of the diseases of the skin) in medical school used to squelch any inclination of students to regard oily skin, blackheads and pimples (acne) lightly by describing with considerable feeling how much he himself had suffered because of acne in his early 'teens.

In the pamphlet on the subject —Acne (Blackheads and Pimples)—which any reader may have if he or she asks for it in writing (not with a clipping) and incloses a stamped self addressed envelope—you will find that this common condition of the sin of 'teen age boys and girls is more or less normal, physiological and in no way indicative of purity or impurity of blood or anything else.

Whether lack of or insufficient daily intake may have anything to do with the cause or cure of acne, I don't know.

I do not believe that an optimal daily ration of riboflavin (formerly known as vitamin B2 and vitamin G, and by scientific investigators as the anti-dermatis factor) promotes a healthy condition of the skin—perhaps the high riboflavin content of milk explains the fame of milk as food for the complextion. Optimal daily ration three or four times as much as nutrition authorities recommend as the minimum daily requirement— the minimum requirement being the least that will prevent actual manifestations of nutritional deficiency disease.

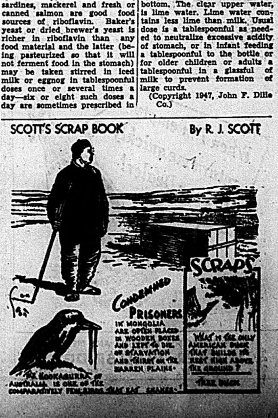
Besides milk and milk products, particularly cheese of any kind, the best food sources of riboflavin are the leafy portions and growing parts of green vegetables— good nutrition requires that salad (a dish made chiefly if not wholly of raw greens, leaves, stems, roots) be the first course of every dinner or perhaps the main part of lunch. Lamb kidney, calf or beef liver, sardines, mackerel and fresh or canned salmon are good food sources of riboflavin. Baker's yeast or dried brewer's yeast is richer in riboflavin than any food material and the latter (being pasteurized so that it will not ferment food in the stomach) may be taken stirred in iced milk or eggnog in tablespoonful doses once or several times a day—six or eight such doses a day are sometimes prescribed in the treatment of pellagra. Of course pure riboflavin tablets are available if or when one cannot take enough food or yeast to insure adequate intake of riboflavin—each tablet contains say twice the minimum daily requirement, so that three tablets a day would give an optimal daily intake of riboflavin.

In many instances of obstinate acne of long standing, with indurated or hardened nodules or lumps which seem neither to suppurate or fester nor to clear up under ordinary treatment, vitamin A may give happy results but bear in mind it is food, not medicine, and so it is a mistake to "try" it for a while and quit if no immediate effect is apparent. Don't take it at all unless you carry on with the experiment for at least six weeks. I suggest that one with sluggish, hardened acne pimples, or dry gooseflesh papules, take four capsules of vitamin A a day for the first two weeks, and thereafter two capsules a day for several months—each capsule containing 25,000 units of vitamin A.

Best food sources of vitamin A are whole fresh milk cream, butter, egg yolk, yellow cheese, calf or beef liver, sardines, carp and, if you care for it on your salad or pancakes, cod liver oil or other fish liver oil.

Remember, young 'uns, the more milk you consume day by day the better for your health, nutrition, vite, complextion, good looks and everything.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS



Lime Water

In using slaked lime for lime water do you shake the sediment up with the water when taking it or... (W.S.)

Answer — Do not use slaked lime. Use unslaked, live, quick lime—a piece the size of a walnut or a rounded tablespoonful, in a quart of water, let stand in crock or jar, stirring up once and allowing sediment to fall to bottom. The clear upper water, is lime water. Lime water contains less lime than milk. Usual dose is a tablespoonful as needed to neutralize excessive acidity of stomach, or in infant feeding a tablespoonful to the bottle or for older children or adults a tablespoonful in a glassful of milk to prevent formation of large curds.

SCOTT'S SCRAP BOOK — By R. J. SCOTT

W. R. Campbell, Veteran Ford Of Canada Chief, Dies

Windsor, Ont., Aug. 11 (CP) — Ford Motor Company of Canada's huge Windsor plant will shut down Tuesday in tribute to one of the key men in its great development, Wallace R. Campbell, 68, President for 17 years and Chairman of the Board since April, 1946, who died at his home yesterday after a long illness.

On that day he will be borne to rest by senior Ford employees who worked with him in building the company into a massive leader in Canada's automobile industry.

It was in 1905—when the horseless carriage was still being laughed at as a new fad would soon fade—that Wallace Ronald Campbell left a $4.50 a week job as a general handyman to become Ford's first bookkeeper.

He was one of 80 employees then, and as Ford grew into a concern employing thousands of men, Mr. Campbell rose with it.

A steady ascent through executive positions reached its peak when he became President in March, 1929. That year Ford turned out 116,000 automobiles where 24 years before W. R. Campbell had seen full production at 50.

Mr. Campbell also was treasurer until 1943 when pressure of wartime duties forced him to relinquish the duties.

Heads War Board

It was soon after outbreak of war in 1939 that he was persuaded to head the Board directing Canada's war output, a position he held until the Department of Munitions and Supply took over in April, 1940.

From then on, in addition to leading a firm which built 400,000 units in more than 50 types of equipment to the fighting fronts, Mr. Campbell devoted much time to varied wartime tasks.

He became Chairman of the Board of Directors.

Mr. Campbell yesterday paid tribute to his predecessor when he said: "In no small measure is the contribution he made nor the influence he exerted in the shaping and progress of the company... his foresight and imagination live us into new and greater ventures."

Born in Windsor

Born in Windsor, Feb. 2, 1882, Wallace Campbell grew up to devote his full energy to his company's improvement. A man of few words, he much preferred action and had implicit faith in the future of Canada as one of the world's greatest producing nations.

In addition to industrial responsibilities which saw him holding directorships in Ford companies in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Malaya, India, and of the Polymer Corporation, Crown-owned synthetic rubber plant near Sarnia, Mr. Campbell found time to give his leadership to countless welfare projects.

Among them were the Boy Scouts, Salvation Army, Victorian Order of Nurses, Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., St. John Ambulance Brigade and several Windsor hospitals.

He was also a member of the executive board of the National War Services Department and of the National Research Council.

For wartime efforts, Mr. Campbell was made a Commander of the British Empire in the King's Birthday Honors List July, 1946. He was the second Windsor citizen thus honored, his widow having been awarded the C.B.E. for her long service with the Canadian Red Cross.

Asylum Inmate Makes Escape

Penetanguishene, Ont., Aug. 11 (CP) — Melville Wilkie, inmate of the criminal insane asylum at this town 100 miles north of Toronto, for the third time escaped from the institution Sunday.

In his last break last November Wilkie made his way to Winnipeg where he was reapprehended in January.

Wilkie was convicted of murder in the death of his wife in 1933 and was transferred to life to asylum when it was found he was criminally insane.

Wilkie's break occurred about 2.20 yesterday when he and two other inmates attempted to scale the high wire fence surrounding the exercise yard. The fact that the top of the fence overhangs on the inside prevented the other two from getting clear before nearby guards rushed to the scene. Five guards were in the yard at the time.

Feared Japs May Drift Economically And Politically into Russian Camp

By DENNIS WARNER

Tokyo, Aug. 11 — (Reuters) — Fears that Japan may become an eastern arena for a struggle between democratic and communist political forces in the year immediately following the peace treaty are disturbing Allied economics in Japan.

They believe that Japan, in spite of considerable help and political direction from the United States, may drift economically and politically into the Russian camp.

British and American economists say that the initial opening of foreign trade there will be an automatic steadying effect of purchases from the western powers, whose manufacturers will not welcome Japanese goods in competition with their own, and a definite swing toward the U. S. S. R. which is capable of absorbing everything Japan can produce.

Raw silk was always the principal Japanese pre-war export. But even before the war, the silk worms web was becoming less tenacious. Rayon and plastics were beginning to push the less hardy silk stockings from department store counters.

The silk situation today is even more depressing. There are warehouse full of it in the United States — and few buyers even at could come from the U.S.S.R. drastically reduced prices.

But nevertheless the Far Eastern Commission has approved in principle Japan's return to the economic level of 1936-37. It is obvious that silk will not effect the required improvement.

Textiles might do it. But Japanese manufacturers say that it will take at least 10 years to restore the industry to the 1936-37 level. And before that can be accomplished Allied competition is certain from India and possibly, too, from China.

Japan's hope, economists say, lies in what may be termed the machinery of reparations, namely the narrow Tsushima Sea from Japan lies what will certainly become the basis of any Soviet eastern bloc — Korea, Manchuria, Siberia, and at least a large part of China.

To a certain extent the United States will be able to prop Japan's but the main on the United States pocket will continue to become heavier. And in the long run; Japan must trade with those countries and peoples that can consume her goods and supply her with others from which to make more.

Today, the United States provides the food Tokyo needs. Siberia could do it just as well. Today, the oil and cotton come from the United States. Tomorrow they

Humidity is Due For Drop--Warm Weather Continues

(By The Canadian Press)

Humidity — the more uncomfortable aspect of a heat wave—was due for a drop today in Eastern Canada but complete relief was not the lot for a sweltering populace which faced temperatures in the midle eighties throughout most of the area.

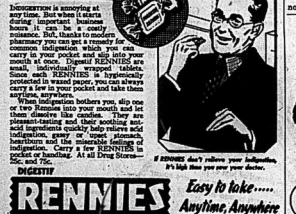
There was no sign of an immediate letup in the heat wave which has shrouded most of the east for a week.

However, some hope was seen in a mass of cool air advancing from the northwest which was causing showers in Northern Ontario as far south as Kirkland Lake and Georgian Bay.

The showers in northern districts were welcomed by tinderdry forests which have constituted a high fire hazard in districts where blazes are not already burning.

In general the forecast for the central provinces was clear and "very warm."

With the exception of such northern spots as Moosonee where the mercury was expected to register in the mid-seventies there was no prospect of anything under 80.



HEAVY FIRE LOSS AT WASAGA BEACH

Wasaga Beach, Ont., Aug. 11—(CP) — A restaurant and a cottage were destroyed by fire early Saturday on this Georgian Bay summer resort. Damage was estimated at $50,000. Fire was believed to have started from an oil stove in the restaurant and Collingwood, Barrie and Camp Borden fire brigades helped fight the flames.

The restaurant, a modern frame building erected only last summer, was owned by Basil Sornburger. The cottage, owned by William Freeman, an engineer on the Alaska Highway, was located near the restaurant in the most densely populated section of the beach.

CSU Charges Men Sent to Cornwall To Create Incident

Cornwall, Ont., Aug. 11 (CP) — The charge that a "party of hoodlums" had been sent to Cornwall Saturday night by a rival union to create an incident was made last night by Harry Davis of Montreal, president of the Canadian Seamen's Union.

Davis asser-ted that the strangers had been sent here by J. A. (Pat) Sullivan, head of the rival Canadian Lake Seamen's Union, to create an incident in the present dispute between the C.S.U. and three steamship firms over terms of employment. This dispute at present is under arbitration by Leonard Brockington at Ottawa.

Citizens noticed an estimated 50 men, strangers to the town, patrolling the canal bank close to the locks. A bus load of the men arrived Saturday night but left again later. The men would not say anything except that they were "just tourists looking over your beautiful city." Another party arrived Sunday morning.

There was no suggestion of violence although the captain of one vessel looking through last night had carried a knife against any attempt to board the ship. A handful of C.S.U. members under Michael Jackson, union organizer, were also present but made no attempt to interfere.

Two Lines Refuse

Mr. Davis and H. C. Meade, Atlantic vice president of the C.S.U. arrived here from Montreal and issued a statement which said that the Canada Steamship Lines and the Sarnia and Colonial Steamship Company had refused to accept Mr. Brockington's proposals for settlement of the dispute between these companies and the Union.

This was the first indication that settlement proposals had been put forward by Mr. Brockington. The federal conciliator was in Montreal but declined to make any statement last night.

"The refusal of the companies to agree to the government's proposal following on their refusal to comply with the decision of an arbitration board clearly reveals that they have been prepared long in advance to reject these proposals and deny the Labor Laws and the government because of their desire to smash the union," said the Davis statement.

"In view of this there can be no doubt as to who bears the responsibility for failure to achieve a peaceful settlement. The shipowners are apparently trying to cover up these issues by attempting to provoke a situation in Cornwall over the weekend.

"On Saturday noon Mr. Brockington advised the Union that he had received wires from these two companies saying that the C.S.U. was going on strike at 2 p.m., Saturday. The Union immediately informed Mr. Brockington that this was not true.

Organized By Sullivan

"Later in the afternoon a busload of gangsters from Montreal were organized by Sullivan's henchmen to go to Cornwall. This latest move by Sullivan when linked up with many false and misleading stories of violence on the waterfront would seem to indicate that the Sullivan group are hopeful of creating an incident which would have served to obscure their responsibility for the present situation.

"In Cornwall last night (Saturday) a busload of hoodlums in the employ of J. A. Sullivan arrived and proceeded to patrol the canal banks while vessels were locking through. Our seamen on these vessels followed the instructions issued from the headquarters of the Union and ignored these hoodlums and refused to be provoked.

"Prime Minister Mackenzie King has been notified by the Union of these facts and has been asked to put a stop to these illegal activities designed to thwart the seamen's right to collective bargaining. The Union has offered to assist the government with concrete proof as to the employment of these hoodlums. In the meantime the Union is keeping with its pledge is patiently awaiting Mr. Brockington's report to be made to the government on Monday."

With Canada's Naturalists

(By The Canadian Press)

How many bones are there in the spine of a Pacific herring? It all depends on where you caught the herring. It ranges out of the sea off San Diego, Calif., the number of vertebrae in the fish would likely be fifty. If you netted the herring off the Alaskan coast the number would be 53, and the herrings off the southern British Columbia get along nicely with an average of 51 bones in their spines.

In brief—warm ocean water means a low, and cold water a high vertebral count in Pacific herrings. Or, as the scientists put it, the mean vertebral counts varies inversely with the temperature of water existing during the period when the eggs are spawned in the sea.

All this means little or nothing to the layman, but Canadian and United States scientists, working with the welfare of the fishing industry at heart, conducted this herring bone count both by dissection and X-ray, for a special reason. Since they have established the fact that the herrings off the California, British Columbian and Alaskan coasts tend to form local populations, migration and intermingling is so limited that the intensity of fishing activities in each area must be regulated to avoid local depletion of the run.

In other words, conservation measures now can be undertaken with an increased scientific knowledge of the lowly herring.

The skunkcabbage, insect-baiting plant which lives in many Canadian swamps and has the aromatic appeal of limburger cheese, happens to be related to the calla lily, proud and beautiful.

That relationship does not make the skunkcabbage popular. It is snubbed and avoided even by scent amassed botanists. Yet the plant is unusually popular with many lowly creatures.

Spiders — nowing that flesh flies flock to it — build webs over the entrance to its spathes. Lizards dwell beneath it because their enemies keep a safe distance from its evil odor. Even some of the swamp-dwelling birds build nests near, and occasionally inside, the hollow of the skunkcabbage, knowing that intruders will avoid their home sites.

There are protective odors as well as colors.

Magpies which abound in the Canadian Rocky Mountain region, Canada jays, or "whisky jacks" encountered all the way from Nova Scotia to British Columbia, and crows far too abundant to be widespread regions, are among the birds with a curious "collecting" instinct, hoarding all sorts of odds and ends in or near their nests.

Charles Bruley, Canadian ornithologist, says Bald Eagles are keener collectors than any other species. In their lofty nests he has found gutch treasures as a rubber shoe a fubber ball (which the bird was trying to hatch), a child's dress, an electric light bulb, a sugar bag, gunny sack, and seashells by the score. In one nest he found a fishing line with hook and 70 feet of line complete.

Use CERTO to get
50% MORE JAM or JELLY
Quick ... Easy ... Sure Results

1 SHORT BOIL saves time and work. To make jam with Certo you need only a one to two-minute full, rolling boil ... for jellies only a half-minute to a minute.

2 YOU GET 50% MORE jam or jelly than with old-fashioned, long-boil recipes. The Certo boil is so short that very little of your precious juice has time to boil away in steam.

3 FRESH FRUIT TASTE and colour are retained in Certo jams and jellies. They taste delicious, look appetizing because the boil is too short to spoil the fresh flavor or dull the natural colour.

4 TESTED RECIPES Give sure results. See booklet under the label. Follow exactly the one for the particular fruit you are using. Certo is fruit pectin—the natural jellying substance extracted from fruit.

A pound of jam or jelly made with Certo contains no more sugar than a pound made the old long-boil way

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Stub R. Knox uses a bridge system he is unable to cope with. Then he cries his eyes out when an opponent sticks in a bid. He is unsure whether his hand is now worth a bid.

If he knows how many tricks he has, he knows how high he can bid. If he would have bid that high when an opponent keeps his yap shut, why,let the bummer talk him out of it?

It seems that south opened with a club and west stuck in an interference bid of three hearts, which bid three spades with the hand you see here:

♠ K Q 9 8 3
♥ 6 4 2
♦ 10 7
♣ J 8 6 4 3

South made a wrong bid after that. Because of the words he bid by south, the south-north pair ended in a contract that was defeated.

Comes now south with tears rolling down his pale and sunken cheeks. He admits that north had a handicap bid if no bid had intervened. But not as high as three after an opponent forced him to reply at that level. South was all wet about this.

North has five tricks; two high cards, ace and diamond, a short, in hearts. Before he responds, he is assumed to have two tricks. He counts on the partnership number by one for each trick he has in excess of two.

So, his response at the level of three was not too high. He has three tricks more than his assumed two. His bid of three consumed only two of his three extra tricks.

Therefore, he had more than enough to drive to game. Three. In fact, he still has another raise in reserve. He can use it when he later assists clubs. That he can.

If it turns out wrong, the north hilds would not be wrong. The mistake would be in bids that south has made. Don't you think so?

No one who errs will often bellow and blame it on the other fellow.

Billiards Take Opticals 15-1

Pounding out fourteen hits for fifteen runs the Sheridan Billiard nine defeated the Optical softball crew 15-1 in a Commercial League softball game at the Centennial field last evening.

Sheridans got into the attack with four hits for four runs in the first frame on a double by Woods and a triple by Reid. They scored three more in the second inning on a double by Gilchrist after three men had walked. Two bases on balls and a double by Herrle in the third gave them another run. Two more walks and five hits accounted for the next three Sheridan runs in the fifth innings.

The Optical team scored their lone tally in the fourth inning when Callaghan got on base on a single. He was squeezed around with some long hits and scored on a dropped ball.

Harris went the distance for the winners striking out nine batters, walking two, and allowing nine hits for one run. Reid, on the losing line for the Optical, struck out five, walked nine, and gave up

Best at the plate for Sheridans were Carson and Woods getting three for three.

The line-ups:

Sheridans — Young cf, Shore lf, Carson c, Seaton 1b, Gilchrist lf, Woods 2b, Tebworth c, Barnum rf, Harris p.

Optical — Weaver 3b, Rawson 2b, Semark ss, Callaghan 1b, Kimmih lf, Hughes c, Feever p, Bulpit cf, Tugnette rf.

The score by innings:

Optical	....	000	100	0—	1	9	3
Sheridans	..	431	240	x—15	14	1

4th. Plane-Load Of Immigrants Now in Ontario

Toronto, Aug. 11 (CP) — The fourth plane-load in Ontario's aerial mass immigration scheme from Britain arrived today with 39 men and one woman, bringing to 159 the total landed so far. Ontario hopes to bring 7,000 Britons by air before the end of the year.

Only woman aboard was Mrs. Patricia Gordon of Fulham, London, whose husband was also in the party. As on earlier flights, which started just a week ago, today's arrivals included carpenters, teachers, cooks, steel-workers, painters, a policeman, a baker, factory workers, a technical engineer and a motor mechanic.

Leonard Fisher of Coventry, an air engineer, who worked recently on British jet engines, said that he believed jets would soon supersede the ordinary radial engine. "When jets are fully developed the flight we have just made in 18 hours will be cut to about two. People leaving England will be able to breakfast in London and arrive in Toronto an hour before breakfast time here."

Sports Roundup

By HAROLD V. RATLIFF
(For Hugh Fullerton Jr.)

El Paso, Texas, Aug. 11 (AP)

Adolph Rupp, the Kentucky Colonels' coach of basketball, who was so popular with his expert and colorful Cadets at Texas A. and M., coaching school in 1946 that they brought him back this year, is making as much money for high school mentors by just lending his presence to coaching clinics over the United States — when he appeared at the Texas coaching school in El Paso this week it was his sixth of the year — Bill Hollis, long-proposed, silver-topped Irishman who coached football at Indiana told the 852 boys and coaches at the Texas clinic: "We are not allowed to go out and get players in the big tent, but if a friend sends us one that's all right" . . . then he added, with a wink, he tended to be a sad tone: "notice is I don't have any friends."

He's Not Either A Sissy

Sixteen-year-old Jimmy McLane of Akron, Ohio, who was National A.A.U. long-distance swimming champion at the age of 13 and has been mopping up in the 440, 880, and 1,500-meter events since is giving up the long distance event — it wasn't because of the strain of long-distance swimming but because of the grueling grind of having to go around the country trying to make time with Jimmy will be 17 Sept. 13 . . . one more item on McLane: "His mama, who travels around to see him with all the distance events and uncontested wins in England when he swims in the Olympics can't swim.

Record Miscalculation

Javier Montes, 17-year-old El Paso schoolboy who ran the mile in 4:25.0 last summer in the Texas Interscholastic League meet, did it because of a miscalculation . . . his coach, Eugene Goebel of Bowie High school, planned on 4:29 or 4:30 mile . . . The best Javier had ever run before was 4:37 at home but they figured when he got onto a good track, against fast competition, with a tail wind didn't bother he could beat 4:30 . . . Javier's tracks are what said Goebel, "and besides he couldn't find anyone to push him." . . . At the University of Texas Memorial Stadium cinder path in which Javier ran, weather conditions perfect except for the competition . . . he stepped out for the latest mile in Texas High School history . . . they think he'll do 4:15 next season which would smash the National scholastic record,... Javier gets himself into shape by running two miles from home to school and then running back when classes are out... that is, after he's taken his regular work-out.

SLEEPING UNDER CAR PROVES RISKY

Toronto, Aug. 11 (CP)—Next time 55-year-old Clifford Command looks for impromptu sleeping quarters he won't make his bed under an automobile. He did that Saturday night and it was only his screams that saved him from serious injuries when the car's owner arrived, didn't notice Command, and decided to drive off.

JOHNNY GRECO, TRAINER WINS COURT FIGHT

Promoter in New Orleans Fails to Appear Against Pair on Charge

New Orleans, Aug. 11.—(AP)— Johnny Greco, Canadian welterweight champ, his manager and trainer, Whitey Bimstein, won a court fight — by default here early today when promoter Louis Wasservogel failed to appear in night court to prosecute charges of disturbing the peace which had been filed against them.

Paid after they were arrested yesterday after they were alleged to have assaulted Wasservogel with Friday night climbed into the ring while Greco and Cosby Lindsey were fighting the 10th round of a boxing bout here.

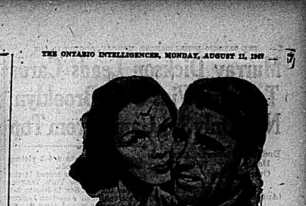
Messina was ordered from the ring by police after he had made an unauthorized entrance, gesticulating wildly and pointing to Linson's eyes. He had separated the fighters, who renewed their battle in a neutral corner after he left the ring.

The judges later gave Linson an unanimous decision.

Messina told reporters yesterday that Greco, his manager, Frankie Doyle, and his trainer, Mickey Gerard, assaulted him on a downtown street here when Doyle called him a "dirty doublecrosser" and charged that Messina "peeped into that ring to save your boy (Linson, a New Orleanian) from a sure knockout."

Messina's license has been revoked by the Louisiana Boxing Commission pending the outcome of the assault charges, his unauthorized entrance into the ring.

Little Benny's Note Book



Pop was smoking to himself in his private chair, and ma said I'll bet you've been smoking that 2 patient days for you to make a present of your own accord about my new hat.

Great I've been speechless pop said, and ma said I suppose that means you've been lost in admiration of it.

Exactly, my dear, lost in an impressionless forest of inexpressible words of praise, pop said, and ma said then in that case, considering that I made such a lifelong impression on you, no doubt you won't have the slightest difficulty in discribing it.

You mean that, half pop said, and ma said, Well naturally I mean it, when did you think I meant?

Then I won't thought, pop said. Well, to discribe it in correct terms, it's rather an amazing creation. I dont mean exactly in the sense of funny, naturelly, I mean amazing in the sense of amusing.

AT THE BELLE — Song, laughter and romance are adroitly combined in M.G.M.'s delightful new musical, "It Happened in Brooklyn," which is attracting large audiences to the Belle Theatre. Kathryn Grayson and Peter Lawford are the romantic twosome in the gay comedy. Jimmy Durante and Frank Sinatra add the comedy lift to the story.

It's a quaint sort of hat, naming fine it, and the word is big their in brim where it doesn't need it, in 2 words, ma said. And now just in crown and vice virtue. Some people would call it a comparatively small hat, while others would regard it as comparatively larger, depending on the point of view as to the basis of comparison. It has a certain air about it that's hard to define, pop said.

And so have you, but I can de-

Murray Dickson Leads Cards To Twin Wins Over Brooklyn; Now Only 3½ Games from Top Dodgers, However, Continue Home Play With Victory Over Phillies

By JOE REICHLER
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Murray Dickson, slight right-hander with the big heart, is one reason why St. Louis Cardinals are right in the fight to retain their National League laurels.

The curveballer, currently pitching the best ball of his career, was the big man in the Cards' twin victory over Pittsburgh Tuesday which moved them to within 3½ games of the front-running Brooklyn Dodgers. Dickson hurled a four-hit 2-0 shutout in the first game and saved St. Louis' 7-5 second-game victory with an expert bit of relief pitching.

Yesterday's victory was his third shutout. He has won nine and lost 11.

Southpaw Joe Hatten and outfielder Dixie Walker combined last night as Dodgers to a 2-0 triumph over the last-place Philadelphia Phillies. Hatten limited the Phils to five hits to register his 11th victory. Walker got two of Brooklyn's seven hits off Blix Donnelly, each blow driving in a run.

The fourth-place Boston Braves staged a two-out ninth-inning rally to come from behind and defeat New York Giants 7-6 in the second game of a doubleheader after the Giants won the opener 6-2. With the Giants leading 5-3, two outs and nobody on base, the Braves put together three straight singles for one run. Then Tommy Holmes smashed his fifth home run to pot the Braves ahead.

Slammed 36th Homer

Big John Mize slammed his 36th home run for the Giants in the opener and Will Marshall hit his 26th for New York in the nightcap.

Clyde McCullough's eight-inning single with the bases loaded gave Chicago Cubs a 4-3 victory over Cincinnati Reds.

With all the runs scored in the ninth inning, New York Yankees nipped the Red Sox in Boston 3-2 to increase their American League lead over the second-place Sox to 12 1-2 games.

Bobby Feller pitched a 6-0 victory over St. Louis in Cleveland as the Indians and Browns divided a doubleheader. The Browns won the second game 4-2. It was Feller's 14th victory and his fifth shutout. Jeff Heath's 21st home run with one on won for the Browns.

Chicago White Sox dumped the Tigers 10-3 in Detroit. Dave Philley, with a homer, double and triple, led the White Sox 14-hit attack.

The Athletics and Washington split a doubleheader at Philadelphia, the A's winning the opener 3-2 and the Nats taking the second game 5-2.

STOPPED ON RIGHT CHAMBERS

Port Huron, Mich., Aug. 11 (AP) — After breaking "Heck, there's nothing to it" — you've got five out of six chances to live," 18-year-old Michael Edward Ernst shot and killed himself Sunday in a game of Russian Roulette.

Police said the youth, a student at Westdale Collegiate, Hamilton.

DETROIT CRAFT WINS GOLD CUP, LOMBARDO THIRD

Band Leader Forced Out of Race in Third Heat by Oil Line Trouble

By ROB GRUBB

New York, Aug. 11 (AP)—The big, silver-plated silver cup symbolic of victory in speed boating's top classic, the Gold Cup Regatta, went back to Detroit yesterday, and none of the seven bruised and beaten pilots who competed in the 40th annual run of the 90-mile event here was sorry.

In the words of Danny Foster, 29-year-old Oakland, Calif., driver who captured the cup in gruelling effort over the hazardous 30-lap course in Rockaway Inlet, it was "the worst water I ever raced."

Foster piloted Miss Pepsi V, 12-cylinder Allison powered racing hull owned by the Dossin Brothers of Detroit, and his victory gave the craft's owners the chance to designate their home city as the site of the 1948 race.

Detroit has had virtual monopoly on the Gold Cup in the big race's 40-year history. Canadian-born Guy Lombardo brought it to New York after his Tempo VI won last year at Detroit.

Second and only other craft to finish was Miss Great Lakes, owned and driven by Alvin F. Fallon of Detroit.

Third honors went to Lombardo's Tempo VI, although the former London, Ont. maestro's boat was forced out with a fouled oil line after turning two laps of the third and deciding 30-mile heat.

Miss Pepsi V compiled 1,500 points and made the fastest lap for the 90 miles—an average of 61.37 miles an hour at the start of the second heat. Her average time for the three heats was 54.88 —far below the 58.13 record set by Lombardo on the calm waters of the Detroit River last year.

BATTING AND PITCHING STARS

(By The Associated Press)

Batting, Dixie Walker, Dodgers—Drove in both runs with a pair of singles to give the Dodgers 2-0 victory over the Phillies.

Pitching, Murray Dickson—Pitched a four-hit 2-0 shutout against the Pirates in the first game of a doubleheader and saved St. Louis' 7-5 second game victory with a nine-hit relief performance in 1 1-2 innings of the nightcap.

Paraguayan Federal Troops Before, Behind Advancing Insurgents

Asuncion, Paraguay, Aug. 9—(AP)—The government intimated today that units of its army were deployed both in front of and behind insurgents advancing on this capital.

(Argentine dispatches yesterday reported the revolutionists had encircled Asuncion by land and were getting ready to shell the city from gunboats on the Paraguay river.)

A communique from President Higinio Morinigo's government yesterday said the army's first corps had already in action against "the rear guard" of rebels to the north and was overcoming their resistance.

The communique said the 2nd corps had taken up positions inside Asuncion to fight off any attack.

300 APPLICATIONS MADE TO ATTEND BASEBALL SCHOOL

Sponsored by Toronto Baseball Club; Opens with Rain One Week

By BILL FREEDMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Aug. 11 — (CP) — Judging from the "mail call" in the last few weeks, Jim Grundla, business manager of Toronto Maple Leafs, is probably the most popular — and the busiest — figure in organized baseball.

Jim has received more than 300 applications from youths all over Ontario to attend the base ball school which opens today, and he won't even guess at how many more will show up because Toronto sandlot stars have to be his applications.

Sponsored by the Toronto International League ball club, the school will run for a week, during which only hopefully will receive grists what is probably the only professional baseball coaching for amateurs in Canada.

"In fact, our school differs from those sponsored by the major leagues, which are actually tryouts for teams who are paying either make the grade or are eliminated," said Grundla, although he was quick to admit the Leafs could keep their eyes peeled during classes.

In fact, he confided, the Leaf management has for some time considered setting up Lake Hamlin, the team's veteran hurler, the year round in Toronto as a professional coach when he retires from active baseball.

Divided Into Groups

Boys up to 15 years of age will be given their tests this morning to see which position they are best. Then they will be divided into six, with Hamilton handling the hurlers, Gene Desautels and Burt Batts the catchers, Oscar Grimes and Fred Chapman the infielders and Ed Carey and Geo. Bennington the outfielders.

Outstanding prospects from these groups will be shifted to join the set ranging from 16 to 22 which convenes for three consecutive days, starting Tuesday. On Wednesday boys will be chosen to comprise two teams who will play one game Friday, and from this game the most outstanding prospects will be selected.

And here's the payoff. The two boys chosen will make an all-expense-paid trip to Montreal with the Leafs Aug. 17 to 20. They will wear Toronto uniforms, sit on the bench during games between the Leafs and Royals, and take batting practice with the club.

Originated in 1938

The idea for the school was originated in 1936 by the late Dan Howley, former Cards general manager. Classes were held in various Southern Ontario cities up to 1939, when the project was abandoned at the outbreak of war. A few of the pupils who graduated with honors during that time made Bill Marchildon and Dick Fowler, both now hurling for Philadelphia Athletics, and Frank Colman, veteran scout to Newark Bears from New York Yankees.

The school resumed again in 1943 at Toronto, where it has remained ever since. It set a precedent two years ago when the two selected amateurs were signed before an International League audience as the nightcap of a Twin bill. Leafs meeting Montreal in the opener.

THIRSTY CITY

Toronto (CP) — Water consumption in Toronto last year reached 29,906,780,000 gallons with the additional supply for adjoining suburban municipalities sending this figure up to 32,582,730,000, an all time high.

right hand.

Various other injuries were all minor.

Removed to Morgue

The bodies of engineer Embury and fireman White were removed to the Kingston morgue where Coroner J. C. Lindsay said death was due to scalding, although the engineer had a head wound as well.

Bruce the service station operator said he heard the crash and saw crowds rushing away from the station in a mad rush.

"Many children came in here with scratched knees and general bruises they received in the scramble to get away from the platform."

Another eye-witness said the train "must have been travelling 60" when it rounded the curve and the engine left the rails, crashing the water-crane down and then ploughing along the platform towards the station building."

Statement Issued

The railway statement issued by J. E. Pringle vice president of the Central Region at Toronto, said:

"At 6.30 p.m. (E.S.T.) Train No. 15 advance section operating between Ottawa and Toronto with 12 cars in charge of Conductor Francis was derailed while slowing down to make a scheduled stop at Kingston station, Engine 6702 turned over on its side, killing Engineer B. B. Embury and Fireman C. H. White, both of Belleville. Brakeman Benjamin Shier of Belleville, was reported injured.

"Latest reports stated that no passengers or other members of the train crew were seriously injured. Some of the passengers were reported shaken up or suffering from minor injuries.

"The first eight cars behind the locomotive were derailed but remained upright. These consisted of the baggage car, two cliners and five coaches. The remaining coaches did not leave the rails.

"While the accident blocked the main line, Kingston yard facilities permitted a detour to be made by all trains and there was only a slight delay at this point in train operations. The cause of the accident is under investigation."

Biard B. Embury, 113 Carrollton Road, joined the C.N.R. on Aug-ust 18th at Lindsay as a fireman and came to Belleville in 1939 and after flirting out of this terminal for some time was classed as an engineer and at the time of his death was spare engineer on the first section of No. 15 from Ottawa to Toronto.

Charles Henry White, 20 Hillcrest Avenue, joined the C.N.R. as a fireman on November 23rd, 1928 and during the depression years was laid off and for a time was caretaker at the Ontario Intelligencer. He later went back to the C.N.R. when business picked up and had been with the company since that time.

JERSEY GIANTS ONLYTHREEGAMES BEHINDMONTREAL

At One Time in Schedule Team Was Trailing by Nine Games

(By The Associated Press)

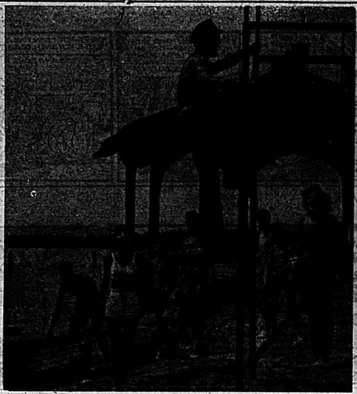
Jersey City Giants are moving along at a rapid pace in their bid to overhaul the International League's front-running Montreal Royals.

Trailing the Royals by nine games on July 16, the Giants since have won 21 out of their last 30 starts to pull to within three games of the Royals who have won 15 games and lost 15 during the same span.

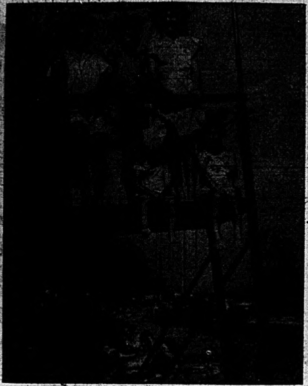
Giants stretched their latest winning streak to four games by outlying Syracuse Chiefs 7-5 yesterday while the Royals split a doubleheader with Newark Bears.

At Montreal, Mal Mallette had a no-hitter until the eighth inning when he gave up double and single. The Bears entered the seventh of the final trailing 3-0 but Gave Woodling homered with two on to tie the count only to have the Royals win in the following frame with Lou Welaj squeezing in the payroll run

Buffalo increased its fourth-place lead over the Bears by sweeping a twin bill from Toronto Maple Leafs 7-2 and 12-0.



The Bisons, led by Jim Wasdell who drove in six runs on two homers, collected 11 hits in the windup. Earl Rapp and Johnny Bero also hit for the circuit in this game.



Rochester Red Wings and Baltimore divided a doubleheader, the Orioles winning the first game 4-0 behind the three-hit tossing of Bob Kuzava and the Wings the second 0-5.

FOOTBALLER LEAVES TORONTO

Toronto, Aug. 11 (CP) —Bob Myers, former star footballer in Michigan whose appearance at a Toronto Argonauts' practice last week led to belief he would line up with the Canadian champs has left Toronto to accept a trial with the Philadelphia Eagles professional team.

Coach Ted Morris of Argos said Myers might be on the Argo roster if he fails to catch on with the Eagles.

Promptly at 1 p.m. Saturday, thee guards left their posts. John Roe is seen climbing down from his tower (left) at Sunnyside and S. Eno pulls up his boat, while a few of the bathers watch. Guelph, Ont., Aug. 11. (CP)—Life suspensions were imposed on the team managers of two Hamilton and one Dundas Girls' Softball teams at a meeting Sunday of the Provincial Women's Softball Union. In addition 13 players were suspended indefinitely. The action followed revelation that forged signatures had been used in qualification papers.

The team managers are Betty Dyment of the Hamilton Ladies of the Inter-County Women's League; Joan Smethurst of Suters in the Hamilton City League, and H. W. Simons of the Dundas Ladies' team.

Those players suspended are Teresa Sheehan of Dundas and the following from Hamilton; Betty Bertrand, Hilda Feldman, Wanda Rhyschlicki, Bette Alderson, Virginia Hann, Mary Hawkins, Audrey Buist, Doreen Ruickbic, Georgina Radcliffe, Joyce Court, Betty Holk and Stevana Arnone.

All girls in the provincial Union must present a signed certificate of medal examination and investigation showed that Dr. L. C. Rymal of Hamilton denied signing the Cards which bore his name.

ROCHESTER BOAT WINS GEORGE CUP

Rochester, N. Y. Aug. 11 (CP) —The Rochester Yacht Club, which has held the George Cup, emblematic of Canadian-American six-metre yachting supremacy on Lake Ontario since 1939, will retain the trophy for another year.

The club's yacht, Circe, won the 1947 series Saturday with a one-minute victory over Aphrodite of the Royal Canadian Yacht The Question of the National cond in the three-day series. The question of the National Yacht Club, Toronto, was third, three minutes behind Aphrodite.

The Circe, skippered by John Odenbach, Jr., finished the series of a total of nine points. Aphrodite handled by Robert B. F. Barr had five and The Question, with A. J. A. Simmons at the tiller had four.

For the final race, the regular 18-mile course was shortened to nine.

The dark hulled Circe took the lead from the start, pulled away from the other two in a series of tacks and was never headed.

Secret of Success Of AroslavDrobny Is Hard Work

By ROBERT CLARKE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, Aug. 11 (CP)—Hard work is one of the secrets of Aroslav Drobny's tennis success.

The stocky, blonde Czechoslovakian ace left no doubt of that in the minds of tennis fellowers here as he worked out yesterday at the Mount Royal Tennis Club in preparation for the Czechoslovakian-Australian Davis Cup inter-zone final Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The 25-year-old Drobny, who will be making his first tournament appearance in North America against the Australians, practised for nearly three hours with his singles mate, Buhroslav Cernik, and Ladislaw Hecht, a former Czech Davis Cupper who has lived in New York for some years.

The six-foot six Czech didn't betray any noticeable weakness in practice, hitting his forehands and backhands crisply. His length was good and his net game sound. It was easy to understand from watching him why he is regarded as among the top five netmen in the world today.

Some observers felt that Roy Cowling captain of the Australian team, might make a switch in his singles selections from the men who held the two spots against Canada. They thought that the Australian captain might call on the veteran Jack Bromwich against the Czechs although Cowling has given no indication that Bromwich will replace either Dinny Pails of Geoff Brown.

Canadian Chess Master Competing At Corpus Christi

(By The Canadian Press)

Canada's own Abe Yanofsky, 22-year-old chess master and co-champion of the Dominion, is among outstanding players from six countries gathered at Corpus Christi, Texas, for the opening night of the United States Open Christi Texas, for the opening

Abe, former child prodigy and youngest chess master in the world, is the only Canadian representative in action at the tourney. He won his master's rating last year during a tour of Europe, when he competed in major tournaments in Spain, Denmark, England and Iceland.

About 100 experts of the game are competing in the Texas tournament, with delegations from the United States, Mexico, Cuba Puerto Rico, Columbia and New Zealand on hand. Prizes, including the $1,000 first prize, total $4,000. Isaac Kasdanof, New York, is favorite.

Gino Alquati of Italy won the European Motor Boat championship for 250 cubic centimetre craft on the Meuse River, Belgium, Sunday. The Swedish entry was second and another Italian third.

Allen Harvey of Louisville and Frank Weisbach of Cincinnati hung on the lead they took in the semi-final round and won the world master bridge pairs tournament at New York with 806 1-2 points during the week-end.

George Case, speedy Washington Senator outfielder, has temporarily retired from the team to report to John Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, where he will undergo surgery on a twisted vertebrae at the base of the spine caused, he said, by his spectacular base-stealing antics during the last ten years.

Fidgety Phil Marchildon of Penetanguishene, Ont., now is tied with Allie Reynolds of New York Yankees for the most victories pitched in the American League this season — fourteen.

Stymie is still the leading money-winning race-horse in the world, but he got a shove from an unexpected direction at Saratoga Springs Saturday when Rico Monte too the $18,500 Whitney Stakes from in front of his aristocratic nose. The six-year-old won $2,500 third place money to boost his earnings to $722,160 but the poor punters who bet him to win got nothing at all.

Young but fast is Florence Schmitt, 16-year-old Fort Washington, N. Y., schoolgirl, new holder of the Womens' Senior National Amateur Athletic Union Long Distance Swimming title. Florence, representing the New York Womens' Swimming Association, covered a three-mile course.

Nurses Save 37 Boys As Gas Heater Bursts

(CP) — Presence of mind on the part of nurses on duty at the Children's Convalescent Hospital here early today was credited with saving the lives of 37 young boys. The nurses broke open a cellar door to turn off the gas after a coil in the gas-operated water heater had burst, dousing the flame and sending fumes through the building.

Police said the prompt action on the part of the nurses in breaking open the locked door probably averted a serious tragedy.

CHAPTER 2.

"Is Sandro working today?" she asked.

He was and what an amore, he was a fool.

Tony said, "He thinks he's a great actor and he's going to get a chance to show it by doing extra work at five dollars a day!"

"Even if he does make the grade," Tony told them, "actors are just kicked around. They play their parts the way they're told. Everybody else in the business does their thinking for them. I'm going to direct."

Sherry was impressed. Kris was not.

He said, "The only money in the picture business is in the production end. If you're any good as a director I'll let you make a picture for me."

The telephone rang and Sherry answered it. It was Mona.

"I won't be home at dinner, angel," she told Sherry. "I'm going out with Mr. Brothers."

"Not—not Mona," Sherry began. "Do you think you should?"

Mona laughed. "Don't worry, darling. I'll be home early."

After she hung up Sherry turned from the telephone and attempted to make her voice sound as if the news was not important. "Mona's not coming home to dinner."

Tony said, "Then eat with us! We're having spaghetti."

Sherry accepted.

After they were gone, she took Whiskers on her lap and sat very still. Now it was beginning, she told herself. The cocktails and the rides home had just been the preliminaries. She thought of all the things that could happen to Mona. Suppose Mr. Brothers' wife was having a detective follow him. Suppose he saw them together at dinner and told Mrs. Brothers and she got a divorce. Then Mona would be a corespondent with her picture in all the newspapers. Mona wouldn't be the kind of girl of which Sherry's mother had often spoken as the kind of girl at whom people pointed their finger.

Hallowe'en night, Mona was dressing to go out to a party with George Brothers when the telephone rang.

Sherry answered. It was Tony. "Are you busy?" he wanted to know. "Kris and Sandro are out and I've got the car. Would you like to do something?"

"I'd love to!" Sherry told him. "Come over in about 20 minutes." And she hung up.

"I'm going to dress," she said to Mona. "We'll probably only go to a movie but I feel like dressing. Tony has the car."

Mona laughed. She said, "You haven't been to out of walking distance in that jalopy."

George Brothers came while Sherry was changing her dress. Mona shut the bedroom door and called, "Good night, darling; have a good time."

Sherry put on a well-worn black velvet, but it had been a good dress and she always felt comfortable in it. Then she slipped on her squirrel jacket that she kept for very best.

When Tony came to the door he looked surprised and a little worried.

He said, "I just thought we might take a ride," very quickly.

Sherry nodded.

"That's why I dressed so warmly," she told him.

Tony seemed relieved.

He said, "You look lovely."

The car was parked in the street. It was low and racy and very yellow. Sherry had ridden in it before—both times she had gone to Hengly with the boys. It was an alarming amount of noise, but had stayed together on both trips.

She slid as far down as possible and let her head against the back of the seat. The night was cool and electric. It excited Sherry—made her feel as if something was going to happen.

Tony drove with all first. Tony headed for the beach. After a while they went through Beverly. Some of the big houses were lighted up, and there were cars parked in the driveways as though the people who lived there were giving parties.

Suddenly Tony said, "We ought to go to a party tonight. That's the devilish part of being poor, it shuts you out of things."

She sounded bitter. Sherry felt sorry for him.

She said, "I think just riding around is fun."

Tony said, "It (is this crate) We ought to be sitting in the back of a limousine with a chauffeur."

Sherry shook her head.

"No, then we wouldn't have the wind. Besides, the chauffeur shouldn't be sitting with us."

Tony smiled, but after a while his face was grave again. He started talking about Vienna and his father who was Hans Dietrich, the composer. Sherry had not connected the name. She was surprised and impressed.

Tony told her about his two much older brothers and the magnificent uniforms they had worn when they were officers in the army; and how proud his father had been to walk down the snow-covered streets with his handsome grown sons on either side of him.

Tony had intended to be an officer like them when he grew up. He had intended to have a waxed mustache and swear at the boy who polished his boots and lightly with lovely gay ladies and drink champagne out of satin slippers. But the war had come and Tony had been sent to school in Switzerland.

He had returned home to Vienna in the end to find that his brothers had been killed and his father had died. The beautiful their estate were taking care of his mother. His beautiful, proud mother had been grateful for their charity.

After a while his mother had sent him to Italy. She was Italian and had relatives there. He had never seen her again. She had died a few months later.

Suddenly Tony stopped talking and for a moment he was still with embarrassment.

"I don't know why I told you all that," he said angrily. "I never told anybody before. It was an awful bore. I'm sorry."

Something warm and happy flooded over Sherry. He had never told anybody before!

"I'm glad you told me!" she said.

They were at the beach now and had a hot dog. Then they sat and watched the dark water.

Sherry said, "When you're a great director, you'll know how to make people feel the things you've felt."

Tony said, "And you will write my stories!"

They made a lot of plans. Now it all seemed so easy to do, so simple to achieve. Sherry sighed a long sigh that stuck now and then in her throat.

Tony said, "Happy?"

Sherry smiled.

She said, "I never was so happy in my life!"

For a minute Tony looked as if he was going to say something. Sherry hoped that he would kiss her, but he said, "It's pretty late. I'd better take you back."

They did not talk much on the way home. Sherry had a lot of time to think. Love would be like this, she thought. That's what had happened to her. She was in love.

Ever since Hallowe'en Sherry had been getting ready for Christmas, and now it was less than a week away.

She turned off the boulevard and headed north. The blast of cold night air had not almost shook the bundles from her arms.

Sherry wished Mona could stay home afternoons and go shopping with her, but Mona thought that unless you had a lot of money Christmas was a nuisance. Sherry had to go downtown Saturday though, and they had had lunch at the glorious afternoon in the crowded stores.

Mona had seen a coat in the window of an exclusive shop and had gone in and tried it on. It was a dream, but had with a sable collar. She look stunning in it and Sherry had learned that that was the sort of thing she should always wear. It was two hundred and twenty-five dollars though, and Mona had said she would look further and probably be back.

Then they had gone to the toy department of a big store. Sherry had felt silly about suggesting it, but Mona was sweet and they had ridden up on the escalator. While they were watching a puppet show Mona had said, "By the way, angel, George is meeting us later." Then Sherry knew why she had been so happy.

They had met him at the Biltmore, and he and Mona had had cocktails while Sherry had tea.

Once he had turned to Sherry and said, "Do you mind —very much if I dance this little girl next Saturday to help with some of my Christmas shopping?"

Sherry had said no, and Mr. Brothers had patted Mona's knee. Mona made a face at Sherry when he did it and Sherry had tried to look stern.

Mona had been out to dinner with him twice since Hallowe'en. She seemed very happy about it all, and Sherry was beginning to get used to it. Besides, she was busy. Every time that she saw the boys.

Sherry guessed that she had been wrong about being in love with Tony. He had not treated her any differently since Hallowe'en night and had never spoken about his childhood again.

It was with a sense of relief that she saw the crooked roofs of the quaint court just ahead of her.

As she passed the first cottage Marcia Stone rapped on the window and then opened it a crack.

"Come have tea with me," she said. "We'll have chatter."

Sherry said, "I'll be over in a minute," and hurried past 61 Hidden House.

She let herself in and gingerly dropped the package one by one on the davenport. Then she ran over to Marcia's.

The two front houses were bigger than—the others and were almost twice the rent. Marcia's living room was larger than Sherry's and she had two bedrooms and a dinette.

Sherry stood in front of the fire and warmed her hands. Marcia brought in a lovely pewter service on a tray, and a plate of cakes.

Two Babies Born In Bargain Rush

Benoni, South Africa, Aug. 11 —(CP)— While 10,000 women shrieked and fought each other at a cut-price sale, two women gave birth to babies. A free-for-all was thrown through a plate glass window and police reserves were rushed to restore order.

The women started queuing before dawn and by eight o'clock about 6,000 had gathered before the store.

Free fights ensued between European and non-European women and four policemen who had been detailed for duty there failed to quell the mad rush which started when the doors opened.

Early in the morning, during the excitement, while about 4,000 women were trying to approach the store, two women gave birth to babies.

A man was attacked by a native when he tried to push past and was thrown through a window into the store. The police arrested one man and the injured man was removed to hospital.

Women started fighting each other for possession of goods and eight women fainted during the morning.

WANTS WIFE'S KISSES STOPPED

Bearded Felix J. Weil (left), 49, wealthy Argentine-born economist, doesn't want to be kissed by his wife, Helen (right), 37. He is shown as he asked Los Angeles Superme Court, where they are suing each other for divorce, to cite her for contempt of court for trying to kiss him against his will. Weil said she embraced him, but he "ghastly pecked her off" because he didn't want her to say he struck her.

$10,000 Job Goes Begging

(Financial Post Editorial)

That $10,000-a-year-job out in British Columbia still goes begging. Education Minister George Weir has been cast adrift trying to carry out the mandate of legislation passed at the last session that somebody be hired at the aforesaid salary to teach the British Columbians something called scientific temperance in their alcoholic activities. Mr. Weir announced on his return west that he can't find anybody to take the job.

The super-beavers of Saskatchewan's socialist experiment used to talk about the same thing: a "positive program of education" that would succeed when all Saskatchewanites learned to spend the glass after glass.

Our zeal for the cause of temperance in all things is unbounded. We are all for governments recognizing acute alcoholism as a disease, like tuberculosis or dementia praecox, and providing some facilities for doing something about it.

But surely these, zealous uplifters in B.C. and Saskatchewan have embraced the doctrine that Parliament can do anything, including the changing of a man into a woman.

Quite apart from the answer that any healthy Canadian girl or boy will give to that, we think these legislators must be drunk with the belief that there is room for government cannot do.

What do people drink? A lot of people find it pleasant and sociable and consider that the money they spend this way satisfies them more than if they spent it on the movies, a new lawnmower or a life insurance policy.

Why do people drink too much? Because they have a screw loose, or because they have worried a screw loose. How does that generally happen? Through boredom. Boredom with the job, boredom with the wife and kiddies. Boredom with one's own lack of success in fitting into and accepting amicably the environment of people and conditions in which they find themselves.

What's this yet-undiscovered B.C. promoter of scientific temperance on alcohol going to do?

Is he going to fritter around the edge of the problem? Or is he going to tackle the problem of husband and wife, and help the bands to spend more time at home entertaining the little woman, and tell wives to be more pleasant, more glamourous, more careful with their curl papers, and about exhibiting their faces, creamed and "curlade?"

Is he going to bust himself with employers? They, for a thousand other reasons, have long been devoting time, effort, imagination and money to the problem of reducing work's boredom; fostering the mental health of their employees.

Is he going to tackle other forms of intemperance. If not, why not? Canada is a lot fuller of people who smoke too much than drink too much. What's he going to do about the poor fiends who put their nickel in the slot 15 or 20 times a day? What's he going to do about the people who can't organize their lives well enough to give their best to their families and to their jobs?

We're willing to be shown. But we're dripping with scepticism. It looks to us as if this government itself is intemperate—intemperate in its thinks governments can do. What's the next thing they tackle? Wiping drippy noses? Banning the naughty-words out of the popular speech? Supervising manners in the home?

Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Bixby arrived home this weekend after spending a week with relatives in the U.S.A.

Most of the cottages are still surrounded by water, several of them have been unoccupied all summer, and oldtimers say the water has never been so high. Realists are keeping their fingers crossed in the hope that it will soon recede.

Wiener Roast on Bay Shore

Mr. and Mrs. A. Hannah entertained several of their friends to a wiener roast on Saturday night. Some came by cars from Belleville and others came by boat. They held their party on the bay shore and some of the guests enjoyed a swim. Before leaving for home a sing song was enjoyed with Mrs. Hannah at the piano.

The new dance hall operated by the Tobe Brothers is drawing large crowds every evening as many drive for miles to dance and enjoy the cool breezes from All-it the bay.

U.S. SLAPS EMBARGO ON C.N.R. COAL IMPORTS

General view of wreck at Kingston of the International Limited, Sunday night, shows how narrowly the ancient station there escaped demolition by the heavy 5700-type locomotive, shown under arrow lying within eight feet of the waiting-room door.

Close-up of Engine 5702 after wreck shows it flat on its side on station platform. Peculiar freak was fact that westbound engine turned over on eastbound track, while rest of train went past it on westbound rails.

Forty Homes in Fire-Ringed Village of Pleasant Bay, N.S. Destroyed; 300 Evacuated

Cheticamp, N.S., Aug. 2 (CP)—Forty homes in the fire-ringed fishing village of Pleasant Bay, 30 miles north of here, have been destroyed by a forest fire and the flames now have turned northwest towards the hamlets of Bay St. Lawrence and St. Margaret's, Rev. Pat Leblanc, Roman Catholic parish priest in Cheticamp, said today.

Although an open space intervened between the flaming forest and the North Cape Breton village 70 miles northwest of Sydney, flying embers apparently had set half of its homes afire and the squad of men who remained after most of the 300 inhabitants had been evacuated last night were unable to save them.

Rushing Supplies

Father Leblanc was unable to say whether it would be necessary to evacuate the villagers from the two newest hamlets in the path of the fire.

Meanwhile, trucks were rushing from Sydney with supplies for the 200-odd refugees who were flowed this village of 2,700 and on R.C.M.P. motor launch was expected here later in the day with Red Cross supplies from Pictou, N.S.

Still another 50 of Pleasant Bay's inhabitants fled east over the precipitous Cabot trail and were being sheltered by families in hamlets scattered along the northern and eastern shore of the island. Possibly some had taken shelter in Bay St. Lawrence and St. Margaret's.

Every available seagoing craft was mustered here yesterday to carry out the evacuation. Chugging north, the boats crept into the shoreline under a thick covering of smoke. Carrying a few personal effects, the villagers scrambled into them.

The moving wall of flame reached down MacKenzie Mountain after starting near the northern edge of Cape Breton Highlands National Park. Believed under control Sunday, it leaped into sudden life again yesterday and advanced northwestward toward the fishing village where the high Cape Breton hills slope steeply down to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

As evacuees piled into boats they could hear crashing trees crashing and the sky was lit up by a spreading red glow. By that time buildings on the outskirts of the village had been levelled and the fire was charging into the community.

Village Said Almost Wiped Out

Though there were as yet no accurate reports on the exact evacuees said the village had been almost entirely wiped out.

Later it cut off the only other land approach, the highway leading east, but not before some 50 persons escaped by trucks and cars.

Walled in by the fire on three sides, the remaining villagers saw only hope of escape was by the sea.

Rev. Pat Leblanc, parish priest here, sent out an appeal to the Canadian Red Cross to help feed and shelter the evacuees.

PROPELLER BREAKS

Halifax, Aug. 12 — (CP) — Search and rescue officials of the R. C. A. F. reported here today that the Gloucester fishing schooner Conquest is wallowing helplessly with a broken propeller 80 miles off Halifax and the ocean — going tug Foundation Franklin has left Sydney, N. Y. to go to her aid.

'Extreme Fire Hazard' Places Ban on Unauthorized Travel In 36 N. Ontario Townships

Toronto, Aug. 12 (CP) —Hon. H. R. Scott, Ontario Minister of Lands and Forests, today imposed a ban on unauthorized travel in 36 townships in the vast Cochrane district of Northern Ontario because of an "extreme fire hazard."

The travel ban covers areas around the mining communities of Timmins and Kirkland Lake, as well as several lumbering districts and areas comprises about one-seventh of the area of the district.

The ban, effective until further notice, does not apply to main road arteries. But all other travel requires permission from the Department.

In explanation, an official said the order was aimed at keeping tourists and blueberry pickers out of the bush during the period of extreme hazard. Just now there are only seven fires in the Cochrane district, but officials fear more if they are engaging.

The ban applies in the forest fire district of Cochrane, rather than the geographical district, which includes a greater area of the geographical district of Timiskaming.

Flaming Fires Over Vast Area

Sault Ste Marie, Ont.—The summer-long battle against fires in Northern Ontario's rich timber stands flared into a fresh intensity last night as two major blazes advanced out of control, threatening a strong west wind. Nearly 300 firefighters were on the emergency front and fires throughout an area extending over hundreds of miles.

A raging blaze which started Sunday in the Missisagi forest reserve had by last night swept through 600 acres of slash and second-growth timber 60 miles northeast of Sault Ste. Marie. Wawa, 100 miles north along the shore of Lake Superior, 20 men fought to keep flames from the town.

From Sudbury 25 men were flown to Chapleau late yesterday to reinforce the small army of firefighters in the Ballard's bid to nullify the increase in the interference in Greece" under the Truman doctrine.

Johnson said support of the Greek Government by the United Soviet satellites was "a peril to peace," and added that any "threat can be checked if firmly faced by the United Nations."

Yugoslav delegate Dr. Jose Vilfan blamed much of the Balkan difficulties on the United States and on what he called a failure of the United Nations Security Council to take action on the problem closely.

He told the Security Council that the 11-Power Balkan investigating commission had not favored "secret and one-sided subsidiary inquiry group now in Greece.

"It was proposed by the United States delegation," he declared "... to create the impression that the serious situation in Greece was the consequence of an alleged interference from the outside."

Delegates made no secret of their pessimism as the meeting got for the session. This was the situation they faced:

1. A seven-member sub-committee was ready to report it had failed in weekend efforts to resolve the deadlock between Russia and western powers.

2. Australia indicated she would press for action on her demands for a Balkan truce despite Russia's declaration that such proposal was "unacceptable" to the Soviet Union.

3. Colombia also was prepared to push a proposal for creation of a seven-power "conciliation commission," which Russia already had declared unacceptable.

4. The subcommittee deliberations, France submitted a new proposal which offered two alternative courses.

These were either to keep the United Nations Special Balkan investigating commission in the Balkans indefinitely and assign a small group of experts to help it, or to abolish the commission and have Secretary-General Trygve Lie find a conciliation commission in the Balkans.

Soviet delegate Andrei Gromyko was reported to have said he "could not understand the French proposal and that part he could understand was not acceptable."

The Australian proposal called for Greece, Albania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia to cease all acts of provocation," to begin direct negotiations and to submit a full report back to the Security Council by Sept. 6.

Arab Fatally Beaten, Two Jews Wounded

Jerusalem, Aug. 12. (AP)—Arab-Jewish hostility in the smoldering Holy Land erupted in bloodshed again last night. One Arab was beaten to death, two Jews were wounded, one critically, seriously and another Arab was hurt less seriously in Tel Aviv.

It was the first report of such communal strife in the all-Jewish city since October the small was in this fighting to six —four Jews and two Arabs.

A group of men—police said they were Arabs—accosted a Jewish man and woman in Tel Aviv near the boundary line of the Arab City of Jaffa, and stabbed them. A little later a group of Jewish city stabbed an Arab who subsequently died of his injuries.

47 PERSONS DEAD AND 88 WOUNDED IN LAHORE RIOTS

Authorities Fear New Violence as Tension Grows Over Coming Boundary Decision

Lahore, Aug. 12 —(CP)— Twelve people were killed and 38 injured today in renewed communal clashes here bringing casualties in the last 24 hours to 47 dead and 88 wounded.

Numerous fires were started inside the walled city in disturbances following yesterday's communal clashes in which 35 people were killed and 60 injured.

Troops opened fire on an armed crowd who attacked a village in the Amritsar district and nine of the raiders were killed, reports reaching Lahore said. Nine villagers had been killed in an earlier clash with the armed gang.

Seventeen people were killed and nine injured when another armed gang raided a village in the Gurdaspur district yesterday.

Authorities feared a new outbreaks of violence momentarily as tension mounted in anticipation of the Punjab boundary commission's decision dividing the Punjab between the Muslim State of India and the Moslem State of Pakistan.

A doctor on duty at one hospital said many of those wounded in Lahore yesterday had been badly mangled with knives and daggers" they probably would die.

NOW ITS A CASE OF "Gerrymander"

Rangeley, Me., Aug. 12. (AP)—For three years, Clarence Ellsworth 48, Easley, S.C., had been saving spare pennies by dropping them through a crack in his attic floor.

Then a fishing trip late, he learned yesterday in a letter from his wife that the weight of the 1872 pennies broke through the ceiling of his sitting room.

Ellsworth said it would take three-fourths of the nest egg to repair the damage.

ECONOMIC CRISIS BILL APPROVED BY 178-64 VOTE

Labor Majority Fends Off Opposition Moves To Kill or Amend The Legislation

By GLENN WILLIAMS

London, Aug. 12 — (AP) — After debating the measure throughout the night, the House of Commons today approved the government's "economic crisis" bill by a vote of 178 to 64 and sent the message to the House of Lords for final passage in time for parliament to adjourn tomorrow night.

The vote on the third and last reading of the bill was completed at 8:48 a.m. (3:48 a.m. EDT), after the Labor majority had fended off ceaseless opposition to kill or amend the legislation on the ground that it would endanger Britain's "hard-won liberties."

The debate finally resolved itself into a struggle against time. Continuation of the debate beyond 2:30 p.m. today would automatically have cancelled the day's business and made it impossible to get the bill through the House of Lords in time to permit parliament to take a summer recess beginning tomorrow.

Opposition leader Winston Churchill, leading the cudgels against Prime Minister Attlee again, charged during the night that the government bill — extending and reinforcing wartime government power over industry and labor — "cobbered virtual dictatorial powers on a cabinet whose prime minister might be discarded" at any moment.

The spokesman estimated that 650 freight cars move over C.N.R. lines from United States points to Canada and said the embargo might lead to a partial crippling of the government-owned railway system.

O. D. T. said the embargo will remain in effect until "a more standing adverse balance" of United States freight cars in Canada is adjusted to a point where the Dominion's margin of United States cars is not more than 8,000 over the figure of Canadian cars on American lines.

C.P.R. Not Affected

The move, invoked to help relieve a United States freight car shortage, will not affect Canadian shipments via the Canadian Pacific Railway, officials stated. The C.P.R. recently returned more cars than it received from the United States.

Figures provided by O.D.T. on June and July showed that C.P.R. operated 17,000 miles of trackage, received 31,580 cars and returned and returned 13,140. C.N.R. operated 22,500 miles of trackage, received 31,580 cars and returned 31,880.

Any indirect repercussions of the O.D.T. ban would hit the One transportation authority ex-

U.S. Charges Three Soviet Satellites With Supporting Communists in Greece

By MAX HARRELSON

Lake Success, Aug. 12 (AP) — The United States made a direct charge today that Communist groups supported Albania, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria hoped to set up a totalitarian regime in Greece.

Herschel V. Johnson, Deputy United States representative, made the charge before the United Nations Security Council. He again urged that Greece be accused the United States of deliberately misrepresenting conditions in the Balkans "in order to justify the increase in the interference in Greece" under the Truman doctrine.

Johnson said support of the Greek Communists by the three Soviet satellites was "a peril to peace," and added that any "threat can be checked if firmly faced by the United Nations."

Yugoslav delegate Dr. Jose Vilfan blamed much of the Balkan difficulties on the United States and on what he called a failure of the United Nations Security Council to take action on the problem closely.

4. The subcommittee deliberations, France submitted a new proposal which offered two alternative courses.

These were either to keep the United Nations Special Balkan investigating commission in the Balkans indefinitely and assign a small group of experts to help it, or to abolish the commission and have Secretary-General Trygve Lie find a conciliation commission in the Balkans.

Possible Winter Fuel Shortage Seen in Move

Adverse Balance of Freight Cars Said to be Reason

(By The Canadian Press)

Serious transportation bottlenecks in the movement of Maritime coal and a possible winter fuel shortage in the Toronto and other areas, were the immediate prospects facing the country today following a United States decision to clamp an embargo on the movement of American coal into the Dominion by way of Canadian National Railways.

Several hours after the Office of Defence Transportation in Washington imposed the embargo, effective Wednesday midnight, a government spokesman in Ottawa indicated that immediate representation to American officials were being made on the angle that O.D.T. used a "wrong set of figures" in estimating the number of their freight cars in Canada.

Confirmation of the government would reach an agreement before the O. D. T. deadline goes into effect, were seen in the official's statement that attempts would be taken at once for a settlement with the United States agency.

50 Per Cent Affected

He warned that the United States embargo would affect 50 per cent of all C. N. R. coal imports and declared "the situation has reached serious proportions." The spokesman said the 50-per-cent figure was the average carried over C. N. R. lines. The other 50 per cent moved through other less great lakes by lake steamships.

The spokesman estimated that 650 freight cars move over C. N. R. lines from United States points to Canada and said the embargo might lead to a partial crippling of the government-owned railway system.

O. D. T. said the embargo will remain in effect until "a more standing adverse balance" of United States freight cars in Canada is adjusted to a point where the Dominion's margin of Canadian cars is not more than 8,000 over the figure of Canadian cars on American lines.

C.P.R. Not Affected

The move, invoked to help relieve a United States freight car shortage, will not affect Canadian shipments via the Canadian Pacific Railway, officials stated. The C.P.R. recently returned more cars than it received from the United States.

Figures provided by O.D.T. on June and July showed that C.P.R. operated 17,000 miles of trackage, received 31,580 cars and returned and returned 13,140. C.N.R. operated 22,500 miles of trackage, received 31,580 cars and returned 31,880.

Any indirect repercussions of the O.D.T. ban would hit the One transportation authority ex-

Canadians May Soon See More Localized Forecasting of Weather

Ottawa, Aug. 12 (CP) — Up-to-the-minute weather forecasts which could tell the time a storm would hit any given area and its extent to within a few hundred yards, now is possible, the Army said today.

In fact, headquarters reported that it is the kind of weather forecasting Canadians may expect in the near future if experimental work now being carried on at point weather forecasting continues to be successful. Research course in the hands of defence research experimenters here.

Scientists are trying to pick up approaching rain or snow clouds on radar screens at the same manner radar can plot the course of planes or projectiles in war. Soon, it is hoped, radar is thrown on the radar screen which clearly shows the cloud's course, depth speed and rain density or size of drops of approaching storms.

In experiments here, Dr. R. C. Langille of Yarmouth N. S. and W. M. Palmer of Montreal who operate a radar meteorological project at defence research board headquarters, said they have been "90 per cent accurate" so far.

This short-range forecast system could supplement the present long-range system of forecasting and the army enthusiastically believes being told the time a storm would hit any given area and its extent to within a few hundred yards, now is possible, the Army said today.

Weather Synopsis

Toronto, Aug. 12—(CP)—Synopsis: A northerly flow of cool air from the central states now covers most of Ontario. The weather this morning in this air is clear, warm and humid. Temperatures in many districts remained above 70 during the night and with this start thermometers should register near 90 by early afternoon. Only the extreme northwestern part of Ontario will experience any relief today as a cooler air from the prairie provinces slowly edges eastward.

No Wonder Cree Indian Thinks White Man's Ways Are Peculiar

Toronto, Aug. 12 —(CP)— Robert Sandy, Cree Indian from Moose Factory on James Bay, has guarantee that the ways of the white men are peculiar.

He thought it was swell when Government officials arranged to bring his 13-year-old son Michael to a Toronto hospital for treatment of a suspected tuberculosis, and he thought it was even better when the white man's government arranged for Hunter, Michael to come down last weekend and see his son.

He got off the train here early Saturday and unable to speak English did his best to explain his was on his way to the Weston Sanatorium. Attendants caught on quickly, telephoned the hospital and in no time at all Sandy was whisked into another ambulance.

He was quickly transferred to the hospital and just as quickly placed in a bed. There was at 8 a.m. Monday — and when a nurse arrived to take his temperature she smiled re-assuringly at the uneasy Cree muttered excitedly. The nurse finally decided that what Hunter really needed was a talk with someone of his own race and they brought up a Cree-speaking Indian, also a Cree Indian. Hunter finally got to see his son.

Supply of Coal In City Reported To be Low

The coal embargo placed on the shipments of coal to Canada via the C.N.R., by the Office of Defence Transportation, might not concern many Canadians when the thermometer stands in the nineties, but the fuel situation will be serious if the ban last much longer than a week.

This is the opinion expressed by the local coal dealers who are already faced with a shortage of fuel. Hard coal has not been in plentiful supply up to now anyway, and if this stoppage of shipments continues the situation may be critical.

One coal dealer stated that it has been difficult to get adequate coal reserves built up even under normal conditions. Now it will become more difficult to secure coal than ever.

Another dealer stated that his supplies are almost exhausted and he suggested that shipments might take place on the C.P.R. until the embargo is lifted.

A third dealer said that their firm has sufficient supplies on hand to take care of present orders, but that a ten day ban would be more exhausted.

All dealers were of the opinion that the embargo will be lifted as soon as the C.N.R. resumed its sufficient number of box-cars of the U.S. roads. They were unanimous in saying that if the present situation continues coal reserves in the city would be exhausted in a very few days, unless other arrangements could be made.

Maritime coal transportation hardships, Premier Canaham Leblanc of New Brunswick said today, include lack the cars to haul all Canadian coal, especially in the Maritime provinces. United States cars from coal mines in Pennsylvania and West Virginia, however, are now being hauled to Maritime coal on the return trip.

World Meteor Emerges

Ottawa — The O.D.T. embargo, which means United States cars would leave the Dominion as soon as possible, is the result of a world meteor.

Also the war a large part of the coal transportation problem was caused by the growing vessels plying between Cape Breton ports and Quebec. However, a major part of the burden was placed on the railways during the war and the C.N.R. especially owing to heavy shipping losses and diversion of ships to other duties.

Another serious note was struck by Secretary E. R. Lockyer of the Toronto Coal Exchange who said the embargo may result in a Toronto fuel shortage in the winter.

Situation None Too Good

"Our stockpile situation is none too good and we need every car-load we can get," he said. United States to see us through next winter," he said. "If U.S. shipments for a couple of weeks would turn a serious situation into a disaster."

C.N.R. officials were non-committal. Ralph Bell, C.N.R. Assistant General Traffic Manager for C.N.R., said he could not comment because he was "not acquainted with the situation."

While the embargo also would be applicable to all points served by C.N.R., Washington officials did not anticipate that C.N.R.'s normal operations would be adversely affected, estimating the ban had not been in effect long enough to cause any loss.

Meanwhile, Leonard Liberty, Dominion Transport Controller, said in Ottawa that he may issue a statement today on the United States order.

Pair, Lost on Huckleberry Flats, Guided to Safety by RCAF Plane

Located by an R.C.A.F. aircraft after being missing for thirty hours in the dense huckleberry flats in Elzevir Township, Arnold Cinnamon, Peterboro and his eleven-year-old nephew, Jimmy Ridyard, are resting in their homes today none the worse for their experience.

The man and boy had started out Saturday morning to pick huckleberries in the Cooper Flats, a thickly wooded terrain in Elzevir. Failing to return that evening friends organized a small posse which searched the area but failed to locate the missing pair.

On Sunday a larger search party was organized and contact made with Provincial Police Constable hungry.

Jack Hatch at Madoc. Constable Hatch immediately got in touch with officials at the Trenton Air Station and a searching plane was sent over the district.

"We finally located the man and boy in a thick patch swamp" Constable Hatch, who was a passenger aboard the aircraft said today. "Cinnamon and the boy heard the sound of the motors of the craft and by this means we guided them out into the open. Then flying low we directed them to a highway where they were picked up by friends."

Cinnamon and the boy were none the worse for their all-night sojourn in the huckleberry country, except for the fact they were

Demon Statistician Presents Some Interesting Sidelights on Exam Results

Here are some interesting sidelights to the record examination results, particularly those next year to chose those subjects in which the chances of making a good grade are better than average. At the end of this little article you will see people will be told what subjects are the most difficult to obtain first class honors.

The following figures were compiled by a keen statistician who worked into the wee hours this morning to complete this public service. They include the results from the Bellevile Collegiate, Albert College, and St. Michael's High School.

Chemistry was the easiest subject to score a first as 33 per cent of those passing received first class honors—eighteen out of fifty-four. Trigonometry and statics was the second best subject for those aiming at firsts, as 22.5 per cent of those passing received firsts—ten out of forty-five.

French Composition Third

French composition ran third with 18.4 per cent of the passes being in the first division—eight out of forty-three. Modern history ran just out of the money in fourth place with 17.5 per cent of the passes being first class honors, seven out of forty.

Another mathematical subject, algebra, came under the wire with an even 17 per cent of the passes being in the upper brackets. Seven out of forty-one passes were firsts. Physics was sixth with 16.3 per cent of the passes being firsts—eight out of forty-nine. Latin composition was in seventh place with 15.4 per cent of those passing getting seventy-five marks or over—five out of fifty-ten. In eighth place came another scientific subject, botany, with 13.6 per cent getting first class honors—three out of twenty-two.

French authors ran botany a close race with 13.5 per cent of the passes in the first division—three seven out of fifty-two. In tenth place came chemistry with 12 per cent of the passes being first class honors—five out of fifty-two. In eleventh place came Latin authors with one first out of thirteen passes.

The twelfth place candidate was English literature with 7 per cent of the passes being firsts—five out of seventy. English composition ran a dead last with 5.8 per cent of the passes being first class honors—four out of sixty-nine.

The above statistics take into consideration the number that were passed and not the number that were plucked. Any failures in a subject are disregarded in computing the percentage of firsts.

Interesting statistics of the examinations show that three boys in the Bellevile Collegiate wrote and passed, seven subjects—Stan Hagerman, Hugh Gilmour and Boyd Upper. Thirteen students in the H.C.I. passed nine subjects, and five passed eight, making a total of twenty-one students who passed a complete university entrance course. Two students at Albert College, and five at St. Michael's completed a full eight subjects.

Stan Hagerman was the outstanding student in the city with his record of ten firsts and a second. He was the only student in the city to get a first in biology, botany and zoology.

Shelly Dopf is another sort of a record in languages, securing first class honors in French and English.

The mathematicians in the city are Stan Hagerman, Robert Berry and Lois Greenleaf, from the Collegiate, and John Aitken from Albert College. These students secured first class honors in algebra, geometry and trigonometry.

Maureen Upper of St. Michael's and Boyd Upper of B.C.I. secured first class honors in English composition and English literature.

Rank High in Science

The scientists of this years Upper School graduates are Stan Hagerman, Bob Willoughby and Hugh Cameron, of the B.C.I. These three boys had firsts in physics and chemistry.

Elizabeth Stone was the only student in the city to write Spanish. She secured a first in Spanish composition, and a second in Spanish authors.

A total of 590 papers were passed by Bellevile students this year. There were 88 firsts, 121 seconds, 198 thirds, and 245 credits.

Some students wrote a full course while others wrote only two or three subjects. Lumping them all together it was found that the average number of subjects passed by Bellevile students this year is 4.57.

Do fair pecking look through the article!)

Missing Jewels Case is Called 'Family Intrigue'

By LYNN HEINZERLING

Berlin, Aug. 12.—(AR)—United States investigators today labelled the case of the missing crown jewels of Princess Hermine, late widow of Kaiser Wilhelm II, as "dizzy, merry go-round of family intrigue" and said the Hohenzollern family was dragging the matter into the lap of German police.

"We have definitely determined that no American is involved in the disappearance of the jewels," said G. Carlucci, head of the army's criminal investigation division, "and therefore we have no responsibility for pursuing the case any further."

American authorities also dropped technical charges under which they were holding Frauline Vera Herzel, 30, attractive friend of Hermine's son, Prince Fortibras.

Ferdinand touched off the melodramatic investigation, police told authorities that 20 pieces of valuable jewelry were from a priceless collection which Prussia—Herbet brought into the Hohenzollern family by marriage—can lose last June.

Ferdinand, 28, earlier had asked Russian authorities to check the condition of Hermine's death-bed last night that he had received a telegram from a report that the Kaiser's widow died of a heart ailment at her Frankfurt-on-Oder home last Thursday.

To escape from hospital, Wilkie scaled a 15-foot fence and then drew a home-made knife when Guard Karl Williams grappled with him.

SENATOR McGEER, BELOVED MAYOR VANCOUVER, DIES

Vancouver, Aug. 12 — (CP) — The Dominion of Canada mourned the passing of Senator Gerry McGeer, who, this west coast poet was preparing to bury, with civic honors, the fighting mayor, colorful (Gerry) Gratton McGeer, died yesterday at 59.

Funeral services were tentatively set for tomorrow, pending the arrival by plane of the Senator's brother, Judge James A. McGeer, from Ashcroft, B.C.

The former newspaper carrier, who rose from iron moulder to powerful war time politician, was a Conservative until the first Vancouver civic head to die in office, ending an unprecedented constitutional gap. Ald. George C. Miller, senior council member was chosen "unofficial" acting mayor.

Tributes poured in from across the Dominion. Prime Minister Mackenzie King sent a message on the death of "one of Canada's most faithful and dynamic personalities."

"The late Senator kept before him a career of public service which he attained in a measure few of his fellow-countrymen have equalled," Mr. King said.

An additional tribute, at the request of Dr. L. H. Appleby, his personal physician, showed the deceased, coupled with a kidney ailment, ended the life of the Belleville-born scout in Conwell who left school at 14.

Introduced Civic Robes

A paradox of formality and informality, Mayor McGeer introduced the civic robes and chain of office to the city hall which was built during his former term in office, 1934-1935, yet was known for his self-conscious grin and the nickname of "Gerry".

Admiration for the British Columbia Liberal Senator's "force and drive and ability to get some things accomplished for Halifax."

Tall, broad-shouldered and husky-voiced, he rarely failed to capture the imagination of the public. At the height of his 1946 mayoralty campaign, he was stricken with appendicitis, refused went an emergency operation and spent the rest of the campaign period in hospital. He fought his usual hard campaign by radio from his bedside—and won by a landslide.

Senator Since 1945

A Senator since June 1945, he was first elected to the B.C.

Their Loss is Mourned

This entire community was shocked and saddened when C.N.R. Engineer Blard B. Embury and C.N.R. Fireman Charles Henry White of Belleville lost their lives in the derailment of their ill-fated train on Sunday night at Kingston. Both men were known to a very large section of the people of this city and their deaths have cast a shadow of sorrow and mourning over the whole community. Among railwaymen and others Mr. Embury was highly esteemed as a citizen and as an engineer and Mr. White was popular with his railway associates and enjoyed the intimate friendship of a great number of citizens. For some time a number of years ago Mr. White was associated with the Ontario Intelligencer and his untimely death is deplored by everyone with whom he came in contact in that capacity.

These two fine citizens will be missed by their friends in this city and by all who knew them in the C.N.R. service for they were both of the highest character and in every sense the worthiest type of citizens. They died at their post of duty in charge of the safety of the lives of the passangers whom the train was carrying to their destinations.

Railwaymen in the discharge of their duties occupy posts of the greatest responsibility. Mr. Embury and Mr. White were loyal to their tasks and their fellow employees of the Canadian National Railways and the citizens generally know the debt the people owe to all such noble men who serve on the railways.

Mr. Embury and Mr. White leave the memory of two noble men without whom life will be poorer. Manly and kindly and efficient they performed their duties like good and faithful servants.

The sympathy of all citizens goes out to the members of the families who have been so suddenly bereaved of their loved ones.

Their memory will long linger in the minds and hearts of the people of this community and in that great circle of brotherhood and friendship, the men of all the railway services.

World Flight Record

A historic flight has ended with Pilot Bill Odom bringing down his plane in Chicago after circumnavigating the globe in slightly over 73 hours.

The whole world was watching the flight through press and radio and knew of the achievement the moment his plane reached Chicago.

Now Odom is planning another flight. That is a picture of the modern scientific world. Invention has followed upon invention to eliminate the possibility of danger in flying and to add to the power and range of such a machine as a plane. Time is shattered and labor reduced.

In 1874 the world was busy reading a novel "Around the World in Eighty Days" by the celebrated Frenchman, Jules Verne, who built his novels on the romantic developments of science in his day and added the touch of imagination. His novels were described by one as "delineating wildly extravagant voyages and adventures to which he added very cleverly prepared scientific and geographical detail." The title of that book was startling.

Today the world is thrilled by such a 73-hour triumph as that of Odom. It knows it is a fact and it knows a great deal of the history of modern science for it has seen it unfolding right before its eyes, year after year and month after month.

There is romance in modern aviation but it is one of the great facts of the present age. It is on a solid foundation of achievement and is fast growing in commercial importance. The hero of the flight, Pilot Odom, is a very real figure, not a character of imagination in a romance such as Verne's story. But it has its romantic side, too. Here are the words of the pilot, "The Good Lord was taking care of me for a while last night," he said as he told of dozing off from fatigue and waking in time to find himself sweeping towards a 19,000-foot mountain peak. That shows the perfection of the modern plane.

Fourteen years ago Wiley Post raced in a plane around the world in 186 hours and 49 minutes. Since that year have come countless modern inventions and improvements.

Speed today is one of the characteristics of our life. Seventy-three years ago in the works of Verne imagination had sweep. Today in the modern plane, imagination too has a great part in plotting the future of the plane and in adding achievement to achievement. Every boy of today is alert to the progress of the plane and knows what steps this science of flying has made. It has become one of the great facts of the twentieth century. There is an appeal in keeping alert to the latest development in mechanical and other sciences but the imagination is linked with practical achievements in every field of scientific effort. There is an immense amount of scientific knowledge which has gone into the engineering of airplanes to the stage that they can fly an average of 269 miles an hour on a world-girdling flight under the direction of a skilled pilot. Science is at its best today in many forms in medical research and in aviation for the modern scientist as well as the modern aviator is the perfect product of developments of this scientific age. Aviation has been speeded up by leaps and bounds in two global wars in which air navies have played a great role in the determination of the struggles.

The plane is the vehicle of a great new achievement of the twentieth century and the modern airman is solidly grounded in the facts and achievements of modern science.

Radiator's Future

Scientists of the Canadian National Research Institute have pronounced the doom of the steam radiator. The new and more efficient method, they say, is to have the heat coming from walls, ceilings and floors. A more even temperature, absence of unsightly coils, greater cleanliness, are the advantages claimed.

Most people will undoubtedly be glad to see the radiators go. They have been a problem to the home designer and decorator. Ingenious methods have been devised to conceal them, but they never could be completely hidden from view.

But it is too soon to proclaim their departure into limbo. They exist in hundreds of thousands of homes in Canada. They cannot be eliminated in a flash. Radiant heating is expensive to instal, and no doubt the materials are difficult to obtain. So the radiators will probably be much in evidence for years to come.

In this connection, an intriguing thought occurs. Steam heat made the fireplace obsolete. These openfaced monstrosities were to disappear. But they have not done so. Instead, it is now "smart" to have one in the living room, though radiators, of course, are the utilitarian dispensers of heat.

It is not inconceivable that the same aura of romance may, in future days, appear around radiators. The time may come when, with comfortable, even heat flowing from floors, walls and ceilings, we may have a tastefully arranged coil — of course, the more old-fashioned the better, propped up under the window, just to give "atmosphere" to the room, says Windsor Star.

Britain's Wild Life

It is proposed that the state should assume responsibility for the protection of wild life in Britain. This recommendation is the main approval in the report just issued by the Wild Life Conservation Special Committee appointed by the Minister of Town and Country Planning. It suggests that the aim should be achieved by setting aside 73 national nature reserves varying in extent from 20 up to 3,500 acres and totalling 70,000 acres. In these specified areas characteristic types of natural vegetation together with wild animals peculiar to the district would be safeguarded for all time. These reserves would be additional and distinct from the areas recently set aside for national parks.

Only a Winston Churchill could say this, according to Port Arthur News-Chronicle, as in an address dealing with Britain's financial position and the need of help from the United States: "There is no shame in one brave and faithful ally, deeply injured in the common struggle, asking another to help him recover and stand upon his feet. Had the positions been reversed, we would have done the same for them."

COUNTRY SUNRISE

To hide the starting of the day
From any early riser's eye,
The city has a sordid way
Of pushing buildings towards the sky.
But in the country, lake and lawn
Lie shimmering with the golden dawn.

No smoke of foundry blurs the view;
No structure gray obstructs the sun.
In glory day returns anew.
With yesterday the world is done;
Then, every leaf on every tree
Edged with pure gold appears to be.

I've seen the sun o'er cities rise
To shine on man-made things of stone
And all that serves his enterprise,
But no such glory there is known
As that which glistens far and wide
Upon the quiet countryside.

Why are scrub horses called capuses?

"Cayuse," pronounced "KYE-yoose," is applied in the Western States to any scrub horse, bronco, mustang or Indian pony.

The Cayuse Indians were a tribe of Wailiapuan stock who formerly inhabited the region about the headwaters of the Walla Walla, Umatilla and Grande Ronde rivers in Washington and Oregon.

After these Indians came in contact with Europeans they were particularly enterprising in breeding horses, and the ponies that they raised were known locally as "cayuses," a term that later gained wide currency throughout the West.

The Cayuse Indians were reputed among other aborigines to be very brave and they were weak in numbers because of continual wars with neighboring tribes.

In 1838 Marcus Whitman established a mission among them on the present site of Whitman in Walla Walla County, Washington.

During the year 1847 a large part of the tribe was carried off by a smallpox epidemic and the Cayuses, supposing the missionaries had been somehow responsible for the disease, destroyed the mission and killed Whitman and his wife and twelve other persons.

Since 1856 the remnant of the tribe has lived on the Umatilla Reservation in Oregon.

Their language is virtually extinct and there is probably not a full-blooded Cayuse living.

"Cayuse" is the name of a post-office in Oregon.

31 Guards, Doctors Of Buchenwald Found Guilty

Dachau, Germany, Aug. 12 — (Reuters) — The 31 guards and doctors of the notorious Buchenwald concentration camp, charged with crimes against humanity, today were found guilty by a United States military court.

Sentences will be announced Thursday, Dena, the German news agency in the United States zone, reported.

Among those convicted was Ilse Koch, widow of the former commander of Buchenwalk camp, who had denied the accusations of prisoners of having lampshades made of tattoed human skin. The prosecution stated she was to have a child in October and this fact may save her from the death penalty.

Others among the defendants included Prince Josias Zu Waldeck, believed to be the first German of Royal blood to stand trial for war crimes, and Dr. Edwin Katzenellenbogen, mystery man of the trial.

He is a former United States citizen who claimed to have been a British doctor, a Czech doctor and a Danish psychiatrist.

Supply of Meat For U.S. in 1948 Depends on Corn

By OVID A. MARTIN

Washington, Aug. 12 (AP)—Next year's meat supply for the United States hung in the balance today as the midwestern heat wave trimmed official forecasts of corn production and threatened to cause still further losses before harvest time.

Plagued at planting time by cool weather and floods, corn now has run into hot, dry weather which the agriculture department, in its regular monthly crop report described as a "serious threat" to all crops in the midwest.

Corn is the key to livestock and meat production.

A short crop this year would affect next year's output of meats and other livestock products.

However, meat supplies for the last three or four months of this year and the early months of 1948 are expected to be large regardless of how this year's corn turns out.

The department forecast the crop as of Aug. 1 at 2,649,959,000 bushels, a decline of about 111,000,000 bushels from its July 15 estimate. The later estimate did not take into account damage caused by the hot weather so far this month.

Officials have said that a corn crop of about 2,850,000,000 bushels would be needed to maintain meat production at this year's rate of 115 pounds for each consumer. They added, however, that it is highly improbable that corn prospects would reteriorate enough to drop meat supplies to the pre-war average of 126 pounds.

Agitate Removal 'Hairpin' Curve Near Kingston

Kingston, Aug. 12 (CP)—Agitation for removal of the "hairpin" turn on the main C.N.R. line running through Kingston arose here yesterday following the wreck on the Ottawa-Toronto train Sunday night which resulted in death to the engineer and fireman.

B. D. Embury and Charles Henry White, both of Belleville, lost their lives when the locomotive and first eight cars left the tracks while entering Kingston station at a fast speed.

Dr. H. A. Stewart, Progressive-Conservative member of the legislature for Kingston, said the curve could be eliminated bly straightening the line from west of Cataraqui to Kingston Mills.

"The people of Kingston are perturbed by this accident and want this 'hairpin' eliminated," he declared.

Col. James Harris, Public Utilities Commissioner, said the straightening of the line would not only correct a hazardous situation but would effect a saving for the railroad by elminating a grade to the west of the city which now makes it necessary to split freight trains thus adding to operating costs.

Senator G. G. McGeer, 59, mayor of Vancouver, who was found dead in his study yesterday. He had been in failing health for some time, but said he was "feeling fine" when he returned from Nelson Sunday after officiating at a jubilee celebration.

NO PLACE TO STORE IT ALL

In hungry Europe, people crowd around grain cars to pick up the tiny grains that fall from the sacks. In Asia it is for grains of rice they scramble on hands and knees. And here in North America there is so much that there is no place to put it. This scene in Baca Country, southeastern Colorado, tells the story. With a bumper crop, insufficient grain cars and elevators to handle it, the golden wheat is piled up in small mountains in the fields. And only a few years ago this area was in the heart of the dust bowl —barren land.

COOKS ARE SO INATTRACTIVE

There are mornings when I'd like to have a record of the bawling out of the gentlemen on It Pays to Be Ignorant gives the mellow-voiced M. C. when the question seems ambiguous. I'd put it on record player and play it for an hour or so for the benefit of the cook. Some such device is the only conceivable way to remonstrate about the cook's wilful, stubborn ... well about what the cook does to the coffee, without grave risk of losing an otherwise admirable executive.

After all it is so very simple to make good coffee if you have any trace of gray matter in that fat...

I must try to preserve my equanimity, even if the witch's broth served on these dreadful mornings would drive some men to drink. I mean this seriously—I believe good coffee tends to keep one cheerful and happy with life as it is, whereas bad coffee puts many a wishy-washy character in a mood to seek forgetfulness in the narcotic.

Here as some things to remember if you want to know how to make coffee and at least not drive away your friends:

Buy coffee in the bean and grind only enough for the brew each time.

See that the coffee pot — pot, I say, and none of your trick coffee making gadgets — is thoroughly clean. Add the right amount of cold water to quantity you use for the brew, and let it stand cold for from half an hour to over night. Cold water extracts the flavor or aroma.

When time to serve the coffee comes, put the pot on the fire and heat it up nearly but not quite to boiling point. Watch the pot and snatch it from the fire just before the coffee begins to boil.

Boiling for even a moment merely drives off the aroma into the atmosphere and extracts some of the acrid, bitter tannic acid which should remain in the grounds — and this acrid stuff gives that horrible taste to boiled coffee.

Use a little egg white or not, as you please,—egg white merely settles the coffee more quickly than it would settle or clear by standing or from adding a dash of cold water a moment before serving.

Serve as soon as the coffee is cool enough to drink, black, with or without cream or milk and sugar.

Well made coffee promotes well being, contentment and true sociability. It makes you and me less ornery—well made coffee, I say.

When the aroma of coffee arising from the kitchen greets you nostrils before breakfast in the morning you know at once that the blankety-blanked—you know the cook is on the rampage again and defying you to open your trap about it.

Well, there it is. Making good coffee is as easy as rolling a somersault— rolling off a log. The problem is to persuade coffee makers to use their gray matter or a little compassion when brewing it.

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Dipsomania

Your booklet "Dipsmonania" Is it free or is there a price on it? Your racket... tell me is there any help for that melancholy or is it just ornery acting? Is the person subject to drinking spells sick or just giving in to childish tantrums?

(Mrs.Y. R.)

Answer — Everything would be free if I could afford it. As things are, Ma'am, the booklet "Dipsomania" costs ten cents, if you provide self addressed stamped envelope, twenty cents if you do not. Briefly, the best hope for the periodic drinker is a series of interviews and advice and help by a psychiatrist (physician who deals with mental troubles). The next best hope, I think, is the kind of sympathetic understanding and encouragement the drinker, whether steady or periodic, can get from others who have gone through the experience before him, in Alcoholics Anonymous if the drinker can be persuaded t get in touch with a local group and attend one of their meetings.

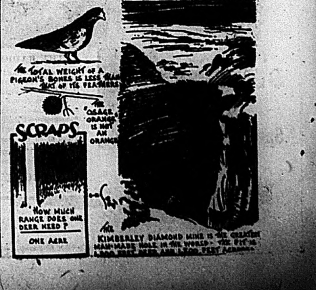
Saccharin

Just what is saccharin? Do you advise its use to replace sugar as a sweetener?

(Mrs. L.P.)

Answer — No. Saccharin is a chemical otherwise called gluside or benzo sulfide. It gives a sweet taste 400 times as sweet as sugar. A quarter of a grain in tablet in a cup of tea or coffee gives the sweetening equivalent of a spoonful of sugar. It is a harmless when used for this purpose in any amount up to five grains a day.

Too Much Or Too Little



X-ray of my back showed nothing out of place or broken, but what the doctor called "lipping," which he said is due to too much calcium. In your column I have read that most of us get too little calcium.

(L.E.N.)

Answer — There can be no question that most Americans get too little calcium in their everyday diet. I'm sure your doctor didn't mean you to get too much calcium. Ask him to explain what he meant.

Separate Paths Being Followed By Civic Officials

Toronto, Aug. 12. (CP)—Two separate paths were being followed today by civic officials in the dispute between the Toronto Harbor Board and 48 lifeguards who walked off the city's Lake Ontario beaches last Saturday when refused demands for a 30 per cent wage increase.

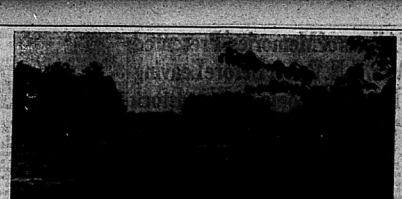
At City Hall, Mayor Robert Saunders was scheduled to meet with the lifeguard representatives for discussion of their statement last night in which they declared they would scale demands down to the ten per cent offered by the board if they could negotiate the other ten.

However, the conference made no change in the course followed by the boards. It will continue to hire new guards to replace those who left their jobs.

William Jenovese, president of the Toronto District Labor Council ... who arranged the appointment with the Mayor, said that even if the lifeguard did agree to return the new guards would pose a problem.

In addition ot was reported that the Harbor Board would refuse to re-hire the striking lifesavers 100 per cent.

"We feel that the men, who had previously signed an agreement saying they would not strike, have broken faith with the public," one official said. "Some of them, without a doubt, were badly misled by some agitators. We feel sorry for them but how could we trust them in future."



Six applicants for the jobs were signed after tests and more were to be tested today.

At Sunnyside Beach, at the 16 who went on strike, returned to their jobs voluntarily and said they would work without pay.

Meanwhile, at Centre Island a vigilante association set up to watch its beaches during the strike said at last night nine one of its members rescued Wilfred Barth, 30, who had been stricken with chest cramps.

A lifesavers' launch had been plying waters around Toronto's surrounding islands since the walkout but with many miles of waterfront to be supervised the task is great.

Weatherman Offers No Respite From Long Heat Wave

(By The Canadian Press)

Hot and humid was again the weather forecast for most of Eastern Canada today with the weatherman offering no respite from the heat wave which has gripped the east for several days.

Scattered thunder showers Tuesday night are not expected to extend farther south and east than the Georgian Bay area. Northern Ontario territories. Warm air flowing from the southwest of the continent was responsible for the continued heat and humidity, and it was not hampered anywhere until it met a cool mass from the pole which brought rain and a chill over the northern James Bay region.

In the official weather bureau records the maximum temperatures — always a few degrees below that which is actually experienced on urban streets — was 88 degrees at Ottawa, with Montreal recording 83 and Toronto sweltering in a humid 86.

Britons Do a Spot of Grousing But Nobody Wants the 30s Back

By STUART UNDERHILL
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

"It's the nicest little crisis we've had in a long time," said the lady in the London fish queue. "Nothing uncomfortable, understand, but ever so much excitement."

"Why, the way the papers were talking last week you'd have thought we'd all be starving by now. But I see a nice piece of meat up there and that will do for me and mine."

"But we don't have as many cars," said a woman behind her. "It's going to be harder to get a bit of macaroni and canned fruit."

"The pinch is what they was a year ago, dear," the first lady said tragically. "My old man says 'don't worry, love—we'll pull through.' And so we shall."

"Things are going to get a lot worse before they get better," gloomily interposed the only man in the queue. "Look what old Churchill said Friday: Socialist dictatorship.' That's what we're in for."

"Well, some calls it one thing, some calls it another," said the the first woman. "If they cut out bacon, though, I shall be vexed. My old man dearly likes 'is bit of bacon.

"It's filma being cut that I don't like," said the second woman. "Imagine, no American pictures!"

"Let's go back to the good old music hall days," said the first woman. "Those American pictures just put a lot of ideas in a young people's 'eads. We shall get along all right without them."

"Films," sniffed the man. "They ain't all we shall miss. You just wait. Very gradual, all these things are. First we won't be able to get this, then we won't be able to get that. Mark my words, it's no happy prospect."

"If only the coal miners would work harder, said the elderly woman. "My Tom says it's them that's causing all the trouble."

"Well dearie, my sister lives in Wales and she says with her it's the 30s," said the first woman. "My brother-in-law was digging coal right hour a day, six days a week, getting soaked with water. They paid him a shilling extra for working in water and he had to fight to get it. One complaint and he was on the dole.

"Cast your mind back, dearie, them days, dear. Cast your mind back to the war ... we stood all them things we shall come out of this. good morning, you old reprobate," she added to the dishmonger. "Ow about a nice bit of cod today?"

Several Angles To the Problem

Toronto, Aug. 12 — (CP)—The current civic campaign to clean up Toronto restaurants was dis-and Ontario Health Minister Russell Kelley yesterday after the local branch of the Canadian Restaurant Association stepped in with its views.

The Restaurant Association accused by Mayor R. H. Saunders pressed approval of the objectives of the campaign, which has seen several restaurants closed after discovery of alleged unsanitary conditions. But it submitted a brief to civic authorities pointing out there were several angles to the problem and one of them is that restaurant proprietors should not be penalized for unclean habits of its customers when they visit washrooms.

"Insofar as washrooms are concerned we submit there is a sense in which the proprietor of a restaurant is to some extent the victim of his own patrons," said the brief. "People who use washroom facilities are drawn from all sorts of social backgrounds with various ideas of personal hygiene and social responsibility.

"It is not an uncommon thing for restaurant proprietors to find that facilities which they have provided and which are not obligatory by any statute are shamefully abused."

Mayor Saunders said after the meeting with the Ontario minister that the Provincial Health Department now is studying overall minimum regulations covering operation of restaurants in all parts of the province and would produce a code within a few weeks.

Escaped Man Is Recaptured

Toronto, Aug. 12 — (CP) — Joe Amodeo, who escaped from police custody a week ago by diving under a moving train at Adelaide station, 30 miles north of here, is back in the law's toils again.

The 22-year-old youth, who escaped as he was being brought back to Toronto from North Bay to face an auto theft charge, was recaptured Sunday night by 20-year-old Robert Purves of suburban York Township. Purves told police he entered his home and saw a man he identified as Amodeo tying up radios and other articles.

When the man ran Purves took after him and brought him down with a flying tackle. A friend outside aided Purves in subduing the housebreaker and they took him to police station in a car. Just outside the station the man broke away but was caught after a 100-yard chase.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was on my stummick on the floor in my room reeding my library book and listening to my favorite Miggit radio at the same time, and pop stuck his head in and then come all a ways in, saying, I supoase if you read with the radio turned off, you're afraid you'll lose the school and again you may lose the knack of doing both at once, while some shooting screeming program is reading full blast.

Sure, pop, and anyways, this helps me to train my eyes and ears both at once, instead of waisting my time I'm getting double use out of it, I said, and pop said, That might sound impressive to some people, but not to anybody that knew Martin Eggwhite.

G, who was he? I said, and pop said, He was a chap who wanted to learn everything at once, and he did so well that at the age of 20 he could do practically anything, including tuning a piano, selling a window shade, hanging wall paper practically strate, repairing a clock, and washing a dog so cleen, that its closest fleas left in diskust. So no wonder his vields were encouraged by Mr. Platter, pop said.

Who was she? I said, and pop said, He was Emmy Platter's father, and Martin Eggwhite was in love with Emmy. Every time Martin came to the house, Mr. Platter put him to work on some job. In fact, Mr. Patter became so dependent on him that he refused to let Emmy marry him and take him away from the house. So Emmy married a button salesman named Jake, a nice enough chap but not as nice as Martin, and Martin never lost his fondness for Emmy, so he took a job with Emmy and Jake as handy man in their home, where he still is to this day, not precisely an unhappy man but by no means a successful one, pop said.

The result being I couldn't decide whether to turn the radio off or stop reeding a while, so I did both and went out to look for the fellows.

HANDS AT WORK...

LEARNING REFRIGERATION

ONTARIO'S productive capacity is the measure of her future prosperity. To assure this province a prominent place in domestic and foreign trade markets, skilled hands are needed. Increased production of refrigeration units will mean a greater need for skilled servicing. Veterans, basically trained in schools and ON THE JOB, will fill this need as they are absorbed into industry. For those who have mastered skilled occupations, higher wages, job security and better working conditions are within easier reach.

Through plans sponsored by the Department of Veterans Affaire and other agencies, hundreds of young workers are being trained for refrigeration servicing. Graduates of training schools are ready now to take their places in industry. Craftsmen of the future, they will have a share in Ontario's progress—an important part to play in her industrial development.

WEDDINGS

BELTRA—TINE

A quiet wedding took place in the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Fenn, Madoc, recently when their daughter, Miss Ethel Fenn became the bride of Thomas, William, Belleville, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Beltra, Belleville.

Rev. A. Poulter officiated with Miss Isobelle Richardson at the organ.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a floor length white sheer length dress of pale ice blue with white accessories. She carried a bouquet of red roses and bouvardia.

Miss Jean Fenn was her sister's only attendant.

The groom's brother, Earl, was the groomsman.

Following the wedding dinner in Oldwas Hotel, Madoc, the happy couple will reside at Prescott.

POPE—MITCHELL

Rev. J. Grant Sparling was the clergyman officiating for the marriage in Christ Church, Saturday August 5th, 1961 of Miss Ruth Mitchell, daughter of Mrs. May Mitchell, Front Street, Belleville, and Mr. Harry Pope, son of the late Mr. Edward Pope, Gilbert St., Belleville.

Given in marriage by her mother, the bride was charmingly gowned in the proverbial white satin with lace, and wore a corsage of red roses and sweetpeas.

Miss Margaret Mitchell was her sister's bridesmaid, wearing a floor length gown of crepe, and a corsage of sweetpeas.

Mr. Edward Pope performed the duties of the groomsman.

A reception for intimate friends and relatives was held at the home of Mrs. Laugh, College Street, where the mother of the bride received a black tailored suit, with a corsage of sweetpeas.

For a honeymoon to points and points in the United States, the bride donned a navy blue dress with white hat and accessories.

Out-of-town guests were Mrs. Walker and son, Norman, of Toronto; and Mrs. G. Anderson of Plainfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Pope will reside in Belleville.

Gems Adorn Gowns Shown

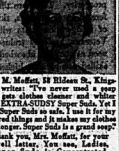
By JACQUELINE SOUVRE

Paris, Aug. 12 (AP)—A huge diamond tiara and a matching necklace, valued at $210,000, were among jewels which adorned society women gathered by Balenciaga.

Some gems adorned a bridal dress of white satin, close fitting with a peplum. The bride will wear caught in the tiara, wound around the up-caught hair. The decolette was decorated with a diamond embroidery and a diamond checker-necklace.

Balenciaga who some years ago initiated the hippy silhouette now shown everywhere, seems to be reverting to rather stiffer outlines. His jackets are slightly longer and most of his skirts remain tight at the knee.

Many coats were straight and unfitted, with shades of red predominating.



While some fashion houses have been lavish with fur, for lining and trimming, Balenciaga has used it cautiously. Some dressy suits had a pelium effect and were rather stunning.

As for hats designed by Balenciaga, they were simple as the mandarin hats, made entirely of pearls, or beaded in gold brocade.

Asked whether American women were bucking at the long skirt, one buyer said: "They had a foretaste of longer skirts last spring and I think they will buy will object to the new 12 to 14 inches from the ground effect decreed by the Paris collection."

IMMIGRATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Lake Couchiching, Ont., Aug. 12 (CP) — Dr. Eugene Forsey director of research for the Canadian Congress of Labor, said last night that Canada's immigration policy should be tied to dove-tailed with general employment policy, a labor code, social security and housing policy. "We want as many immigrants as will give us the highest possible standard of living for the masses of the people," said Dr. Forsey in a speech prepared for delivery before the Canadian Institute of Public Affairs Conference.

Mrs. M. Moffat, 18 Eileen St., Kingston, writes: "I've never used a soap that gets dishes as sparkling clean as than EXTRA-SUDSY Super Suds. Yet I find Super Suds so safe, I use it for my colored things and it makes my clothes feel longer, too. Super Suds is a great soap."

Thank you, Mrs. Moffat, for your swell letter. You see, Ladies, Super Suds is Concentrated. Super Suds actually gives you far more washing power, which means softer, longer-lasting suds, for easier and quicker washdays. And Super Suds costs no more than ordinary washday soap.

'Album of Memories' Presented Mrs. E. N. Baker Before Leaving For New Home in Woodstock

All Organizations of Bridge Street United Church Join in Farewells to Faithful Pair

The pastor of Bridge Street United Church was filled to capacity last evening for the presentation to Mrs. and Mrs. E. N. Baker, prior to her departure from Belleville to their new home in Woodstock, Ont.

Rev. R. Bruce was the chairman, and read the address of presentation, which was in the "Album of Memories," beautifully bound in white leather, which contained not only the farewell address read by Mr. Amos, but special and inspiration gifts presented by Mrs. Baker to every W.A. project and program, and to the members of all present when she wished for Mrs. Baker "good health, real friends, congenial church associations in Woodstock, and happy memories of Belleville."

Two Solos Given

Two solos by Miss Helen Cook contributed much to the enjoyment of the evening's program.

Mr. H. Ackerman, speaking for the whole congregation, paid tribute to Mrs. Baker's whole hearted devotion to the church for her choice and spoke of her regular attendance at all church services. Mr. Ackerman gave a few highlights on the lives of the late Dr. E. N. Baker in promoting the building of a boys' and lovelier Albert College, saying that in every instance Mrs. Baker cooperated for and augmented the progress of the projects. Albert College Memorial Baker Hall," named in memory of the energy, talents and time devoted to, and expended in the erection of Albert College buildings; but a greater memorial has been raised in the lives of the many students who have gone out from the college to all parts of Canada and in many parts of Canada and in many lands, and whose lives have been given in integrity and high service for the Master, largely associated with Dr. and Mrs. Baker.

Spoke of Interest

Mr. W. J. Morrison, principal of the C.G.I.T. spoke briefly saying that Mrs. Baker's interest in life has been "never to speak ill of anyone," to find something good about the most perverse, and to encourage by her speech and her interest in all branches of Christian effort, and to be a real friend, particularly at the Sunday School, "Every young girl has counsellor of life are laid."

Mr. Bell added to all these sentiments Mrs. Baker said that her ministry of over 30 years in Belleville had been on the whole, pleasant ones; her associations with W.C.T.U. and other organizations had been done much to make them so. She expressed appreciation and thanks for the "Album of Memories" presented by Mrs. Bell on behalf of members of Belleville, of Bridge St. Church, and of the many kind friends there.

Refreshments were served by ladies of the W.A. and a social hour enjoyed.

Mrs. E. N. Baker is a native of Elgin County. As a young woman she spent several years in the teaching profession. Later she became a lady principal on Alma Ladies' College, St. Thomas, Ont., at the time of the Methodist Union in 1906 to Rev. E. N. Baker, an outstanding minister of the Methodist Church with whom she served at Broadway Tabernacle and Euclid Avenue churches in Toronto and at Central Church, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario.

She came to Belleville in 1913 when her husband, now Dr. E. N. Baker who succeeded Rev. W. P. Dyer, D.D., as Principal of the old Albert College, where they served together until 1926, when Dr. Baker resigned and became Principal-Emeritus of the new Albert College and worked actively in securing funds for the college which was opened in 1930.

Mrs. Baker continued her interest in the college, founding the Woman's Guild of Albert College; drawing up its constitution which was adopted on December 6, 1934, and becoming its first and only President until now. The guild unites the ladies of the three United Churches in Belleville, and other ladies of the city, is the college in its interests.

The generosity of Mrs. Baker is typified in the large home and residence which bears her name, Baker Memorial Hall, erected in 1940 by the donate of the Albert College Award in her memory (as was) Mrs. Baker was its first recipient.

Mrs. Baker's two children, Harold E. lawyer at Houston, Texas; Herbert, a doctor at Woodstock, Ontario survive, present in Montreal, her husband, Rev. H. W. Outerbridge, having recently returned to Japan as a missionary to the Orient. Mrs. Baker's sister Charles, in advertising business in Toronto, and Fred, a doctor in Montreal.

Mrs. Baker leaves behind an outstanding record of service in religious, educational and temperance activities extending over 54 years, and her kindly smile and energetic personality will be greatly missed not only in the organizations, but by a host of friends in the city. Mrs. Baker is one of the "first ladies" of the Church, and leaves with the good wishes of all.

Leading Designers Allow Plenty Of Choice in Fall Fashion Designs

By FLORENCE MILLS

Paris, Aug. 12 —(AP)— You will have to do a little hem dropping this autumn and it will be worthwhile to be a la mode, but leading designers seem to be giving the fashionable women on their own this fall.

There are a la carte menus in styles stretching from hour-glass sheaths and long bubble skirts to the graceful billowing princess silhouettes. But you can relax if worried, because the first and decisive reports of fall collections shows that the long, bubble-shaped skirt is not a must this season, even though it is creating a sensation at the fall showings under way here.

Schiaparelli, Maggy Rouff and other leaders are showing just as many mid-calf-length, free-swinging skirts as they are showing long and tight ones that restrict movement.

In brief, there need be no tugo'-wars with bedposts to lace recalcitrant waists down to 19 inches, any more than you need to walk with tiny mincing steps because your legs are cramped in a narrow skirt but 12 inches from the ground.

If you have the figure that can take it and the will to wear it, then Paris says you can have it. But the final designation in Paris this season leave that decision to you.

Dropping your hems as far as they will go should just about set you to rights.

The main emphasis comes with a figure-tight torso, and to doctor it up, a tight-waisted, hippy cardigan jacket is used.

However, nearly all the fall-skirted dresses are a natural figure eight hipline simply by the amount of fullness in the skirt, which starts growing from gathers strung from tight fit-ting waist to flare of the fullness of supressed box and knife pleats being abruptly lost by darting into a molded waistline.

But skirts are either pencil lined or with pleats falling open from midhips.

Another part of the "eight" line often is emphasized by short-waisted pleats which run over the bust-line.

Suits barely come on straight classical lines, and those that do are prettied up by the use of rich accessories, usually at the reveres and pockets, or by the use of heavy soutache or jet embroidery.

Extremely narrow peplums are favored on day dresses and jacketed evening gowns.

Hats featuring tiny bonnets, poker hitch, as well as jockey caps, tying under the chin with plain straps or tulle, are prime favorites. The large oval shaped set sideways on the head often with a dressy brim in front is a favorite left over from spring and summer. Pillboxes and toques are piled a foot high and bows, feathers and tulle.

HORSE SENSE BRIDGE

By SAM GORDON
The Bridge Expert

Partners in a bridge game really talk plainly to each other across the table. They are legally permitted to do so, for they must bid themselves to the 16 words in the bidding vocabulary.

These are: One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, clubs, diamonds, hearts, spades, no trump, pass, double, redouble. There used to be a penalty as to what these words meant.

The numerals tell about the number of tricks the suit calls what may be bet for trumps. No-trump plays without trump suit. Pass is the word used to say there is nothing new to show.

Each of the four players is entitled to an average of a fourth of what is in a pack of cards. With 13 tricks to be taken, each is entitled to an average of three.

Thus, when a player starts with a bid of "one hearts," he says with that number: It means: "Partner, you and I must take one trick more than." More than what? More than our pair average of six.

That is why a bid of one must end there. When a bid of two is reached, the pair must take eight (two more than six). A bid of three must take nine. Nothing but plain language.

Look at the tricks in this pair:

SOUTH	NORTH
♠A 5 3	♠8 6 4 2
♥K Q 9 4 2	♥6 5 3
♦K 4	♦Q 8 5
♣J 8 3	♣9 7 6
	♣A K

South tells that he has five tricks. North says that he has five. They make a final bid of four hearts. This says: "We must take a total of ten tricks; four more than our total average of six."

When south uses a number, he also mentions a suit. In this case, he will use the word hearts. Why? Only to say that he has better than average to which he is entitled in the heart suit. And north will say he likes the heart suit as trumps.

Know these meanings of the bidding words, any of your partners may not know what they are saying. But you will.

The Movie Column

By BOB THOMAS

Hollywood, Aug. 12 (AP) — What makes success in the movies? Answer from Joan Crawford: Hard work. She ought to know; She's been a success several times.

Attired in shorts (the Crawford, gams are still trim), she was eating lunch and preparing a dish for her dachshund (it was creamed spinach and cutlet, without mushrooms). Joan, the only top actress who has bridged the years from flapperdom, was commenting on the more recent performers.

"Every star who has come up in the past five years has had it too easy," she said.

"They have never fixed their own hair at home, and come to the studio and put on their maker up, and walked down to get their wardrobe. They have had hairdressers, makeup men and wardrobe girls. And dialogue directors to tell them what to say."

Then she herself turned their attention.

"Stars aren't discovered," Joan emphasized. "They have to earn their way. I know Lana Turner was discovered at a soda fountain. But then she was just a sweatergirl. It took her several years of hard work before she became a real star."

Joan said she felt sorry for some performers she knew who were satisfied with their accomplishments. A hard-working girl, she is always looking for new fields to conquer. Right now she is looking forward to a musical role. Fred Astaire, whom though she hasn't danced on the screen in many a year.

"Just give me a month of practice and I'll be ready," she said.

Sights And Sounds

Ana Sheridan absorbing the ballet at the Hollywood Bowl . . . Tony Martin setting the actor in the U-I commissary wearing dark glasses . . . Joan Crawford, a constant knitter, presenting her director, Otto Preminger, with a pair of socks.

Joseph Cotten, Ethel Barrymore and her son, Sam Colt, discussing the National League Pennant race on the "Portrait of Jennie" set. . . . Loretta Young at work again in "Good Sam," looking his usual dapper self. . . . Jane Russell plucking the eyebrows of her mother, who was visiting the Hughes estate.

Doug Fairbanks, Jr., looking better after finishing "The Exile" having regained some lost poundage although not his moustache. . . . Jimmy Cagney, Xavier Cugat and Lauritz Melchior in a studious conversation at MGM . . . Billy Daniels plucking the eye Paramount dining room before an actor's best friend, his cutter.

Brief Review

"The Secret Life of Walter Mitty" (Goldwyn—105 minutes) is another of those glossy, colorful comedies starring Danny Kaye. Like its predecessors, it is often hilarious, often overdone. It would have been better if the emphasis had been on comedy instead of costly production. Danny as the day-dreaming office drudge continues to impress as a refreshing comedian.

St. Louis Cards Beat Cubs To Pull Within Three Games Of Leading Brooklyn Dodgers

Harry "The Cat" Brecheen Given Two Runs in First Never Looked Back

By JOE REICHLER
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

If you can predict when the currently clawless Chicago Cubs will occupy the role of victims or villains, you might be able to get an idea of which team will win the National League pennant.

Charlie Grimm's second division Cubs, going nowhere themselves, nevertheless have played an important part in the fortunes of the two top contenders, the leading Brooklyn Dodgers and runner-up St. Louis Cardinals.

It was the Cubs' early season ineptness against Brooklyn that was largely responsible for the Dodgers' lofty position. At the same time, it was the Brules' early season mastery over the Cards that had a hand in keeping the Redbirds hurled in the league cellar for nearly two months. Suddenly this month the Brules barred their fangs and knocked off the astonished Brooks three times in a row to the tune of 20 runs to a tallspin which saw them drop seven of their last 10 games.

But when St. Louis showed up, the Cubs just as suddenly lost their bite and succumbed meekly, eight straight times, the latest being last night when they bowed 3-1 to Harry (The Cat) Brecheen.

The Cats, with their old Redmenis, Hank Borowy, with an extra-base blast in the first inning scoring two runs after two were out, to give Brecheen all the margin he needed for his 14th victory.

Nears Coveted Goal

Williams Henry (Bucky) Walters, who traded an infielder's job for that of a pitcher at the advanced baseball age of 23 and proceeded to bag 190 victories in the next dozen years, moved within four triumphs of his coveted 200 goal. The popular 37-year-old National League righthander belted a neat eight-hit 9-3 victory over Pittsburgh Pirates, his sixth of the season.

Dave Koslo handcuffed the Phillies 3-0 on five hits in a night game in Philadelphia to register his 14th victory against seven defeats. Johnny Mize and Will Marshall, the number one and two men in the league's runs batted in and home run departments, drove in all New York's runs.

Boston Red Sox won a 1-0 thriller from Washington in Boston while Philadelphia Athletics were taking a 3-2 decision from the league leaders. Earl Johnson's three-hit hurling and Sam Mele's third-inning home run were the difference.

Makes It Two in Row

Rookie Bill McCahan made it two in a row over the Yankees and Bob Newsom, familiar New Bronx Bomber to seven hits including a triple by Joe DiMaggio, who returned to the batting lineup after a week's layoff due to a shoulder injury.

Virgil Trucks limited Cleveland Indians to nine hits as Detroit Tigers with only six safeties, won 5-1. Cleveland's Lou Boudreau of the Indians and George Kell of the Tigers, batting for the league's batting title, each went hitless in four trips to the plate.

Rudy York hit a homer in each game to help the Boosters total to 16 as Chicago White Sox and St. Louis Browns divided a doubleheader in Chicago. The Sox won the opener 5-2 but the Browns bounced back to win the second game 8-4.

OFF THE SPORTS BLOCK

Rovers and runs fought a close game, but the Belleville crew comedy of errors under the Hobbs at the Exhibition Grounds last night with each team being guilty of some bridled softball as an exactly twenty errors eleven of them committed by Point Anne. Leafs went whamming wildly about, over and among the baselines.

The game had about everything in the softball calendar with some good fielding; erratic base running, costly errors and plenty that weren't, an occasional carded run, the wrangling of an umpire by an irate player, a couple of round-trip hits, good pitching, and a packed crowd, who got plenty for their money whenever they could part the curtain of blood - hungry mosquitoes which infested the area.

The game was a nip and tuck affair, both teams taking the lead at intervals. And the score was 3-3 apiece until the ninth heat when Bradshaw poled out a mammoth home run with one aboard that finally settled the issue. C.N.R. Veterans came back with a single run in their half of the heat, but it wasn't enough and the Leafs trotted home with their fourth straight win in series and the right to represent the Association in the O.B.A. playdowns. They meet Kingston in the first round, the dates of which will be announced later.

Big Jumbo Goyer lost his temper when Umpire Scott called what Goyer asserts was a bad decision, and the big fella took a healthy sock at the official separating him from his senses. Players crowded around and for a minute it looked as though a young Donnybrook would result. But cooler heads interceded, Goyer was gently but firmly ejected from the pastime with Williamson going to base in his place.

Point Anne are worthy representatives of the district and have had the jinx sign on the CNR Veterans all season. It is one of those mysterious things that you sometimes notice in sport but after all the victory is what counts. CNR Veterans played their brand of ball which they are capable against outside teams but when facing Point Anne crowd, something seemed to crack and they took it on the chin practically every game except one or two.

However, last night's game was a credit to either squad. They dropped and threw the ball around like kindergarten kids and the fact that both were bootin' the ball with such monotonous regularity, made the pastime look like a close one. CNR can definitely blame errors for their defeat and Point Anne can't claim much credit for fielding although at times there were some brilliant plays. Home runs by Reg. Mallory and Bradshaw helped the Point came plenty.

However, the opposition will be tougher in the playdowns and Fairbairn may have got a bad fielding game off their chests last night, and it is hoped they did. They'll need all their batting eyes and fielding prowess now that the chips are down. However in the best of luck, Leafs and we're pulling for you to bring back another championship to this district.

Napanee maintained their winning ways last night down in Gilbertville pulling out with a 9-8 win over the Beta Shoemen to strengthen their hold on the top rung of the ladder. It was a free hitting affair with the winners getting the best of it. The Shoemen however, committed six errors afield.

The Napanee crew are best Beta still in third place in the loop with 9 games won, two to play. Flyers are still in second place with almost mathematical assurance during the rest of the schedule which should be completed this week. The Associated executive held a tonsilure last night which got them no decisions on many most questions. Report of the club-fest is published elsewhere in this edition.

Belleville and district fightfans got acquainted with a real right noble at the Diamond Athletic Club open air boxing show last night. In case you don't know, Jackie Dugan, Peterborough's gift to the middleweight title wars, is a TKO over Brantford's Jackie Gee, is well known round. Jerry Downs, who is covering events for Sports, relates defeated Al. Rowland, Toronto via the decision route after mixing gloves with new champion Glen Dafoe slugged his way to a decision over Leo Pietras, of the same city.

And that brings up the big news all over. The Belleville Legion here is sponsoring at the Exhibition Grounds come a week Wednesday. It is expected that Jackie Duggan will defend his title against one of the powers that be are to second Jackie Dafoe, Scout Mondeville, Ray Lacas and other top-flight middleweights of the city and district will be on hand to show their wares.

There'll be something of a novelty in the ring here on August 25th when the bewhiskered Legion Pipers band team now on tour tangle with the all-star combination from the city and district. The gents with the sporrans and tam-o-shanters always proven to be colorful performers and this game won't be any exception. More later.

An outstanding wrestling card has been signed for Friday night at the Memorial Arena with Mike "Strangler" Sharpe meeting rugged Dan O'Connor in the main bout. Sharpe new pinned Ivan Rebel and widely known in wrestling circles has as he has been lined up on the rest of the card. In the semi-final Jerry Tarbet the great Hollywood athlete comes in to test Ben Sharpe the younger of the powerful Mike. In the opening match Tegy McGuinness the blasting Irish speedster from San Francisco has been signed to meet Dr. Ed. Spike the wrestling osteopath. Dr. Spike is one of the few scientists of the wrestling game and has made a great name for himself in the Southern States after he came out of college. In agreeing to be introduced here against a maiden, of Tegy McGuinness' calibre, the grappling doctor figured he is not asking for any favors.

The main bout on Friday should come as close as any this season to sending the fans into a delirium of excitement. In young Mike Sharpe the fans know they have a coming champion. Tremendously big and well-developed Iron Mike has yet to suffer a loss since he started his professional mat career in England at the close of the war. Dan O'Connor, Mike will be up against an artful wrestler who knows what tis all about at all times. Although O'Connor is rough most of the time he is also a smart wrestler when he wants to be and he aims to demonstrate some of his sharpness at Mike's expense on Friday.

Sports Roundup

By BOB MYERS
(Sitting in for Hugh Fullerton Jr)

Los Angeles, Aug. 12. (AP) — One point overlooked in President Clarence (Pat) Rowland's clamor for major league status for the Pacific Coast League is this:

He has foreussed national attention on the coast baseball circuit and has convinced a lot of people out here that the P.C.L. triple-A ball is practically major league. Which is fine, Chester. . . .

Tuesday Interlude

It may be slightly disillusioning but the day Cincinnati's Ewel Blackwell was trying for his 17th straight big league win, the town of San Dimas, Calif., looked sound asleep. But don't think the natives aren't proud of Blackie.

Mr. Inside and Mr. Outside

Friends say Glenn Davis and Doc Blanchard weren't so happy about being ordered to play in the All-Star game at Chicago. Ordinarily, they'd have been all hopped up about the chance, but the army only promised 'em 72 hour passes, which will hardly give them time to learn Frank Leahy's signals, much less afford them a fair chance to perform in their accustomed manner.

Yesterday flight Manager-Promoter Suey Welch tells of the time Manager Joe (Sailor) Stanley, a devotee of the fine art of Spillanism, sold his fighter, soldier Eddie Dancy, to Jack Dempsey, convincing Eddie a lately departed pal named O'Rourke was always right with him in time of stress. One night during a fight at Ocean Park, with Eddie in both pain and distress, Joe reminded Eddie that this pal O'Rourke was with him, and Eddie barked back, "Okay, maybe he is—but how 'bout letting O'Rourke get out there and take a few of those punches?"

Scrambled Notes

Golfer Bobby Locke's appearance here was originally dubbed a charitity affair. The description was dropped because Locke was promised a fee, but charity will benefit anyhow if there are any profits. Sponsors couldn't understand why it was improper for a golfer to get a fee for a charity match, the same as fighters, horsemen and other sports participants. . . . Joe Louis, in agreeing to at least one more title match, apparently disregarded the advice of one of his closest counsellors here, insurance executive Artie Stebbins. . .

KESSELRING IS JUNIOR CHAMPION OF GOLF WORLD

By GORDON PEPPER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Royal Quebec Golf Club, Beauchatal, Que., Aug. 12 (CP) — Eighteen-year-old Gerry Kesselring, the Kitchener - Rockway Club today looked forward to another year as champion among Canadian Junior Amateur golfers. He also retains possession of the Buckingham Trophy which he won last year.

Kesselring carried his 36-hole championship shot on the 37 hole of the 36-hole medal play tournament and then proceeded to hang on to the hot pace then set by Bill Mawhinney of British Columbia who found his game too hot to hold for longer than 33 holes.

Mawhinney and Kesselring were all tied at 67 blows apiece at the final putt of the morning round and still deadlocked at the end of 72. They played it close to the line coming home but starting the 36th hole Mawhinney had the championship in his grasp by a stroke margin.

All that was left for the B.C. lad was to play it safe and steady. He did for short of the green with his first two and a third rolled off the back of the green. His chip shot back to the green failed to take hold and rolled far down the carpet. He took two putts to hold out for a bogie six.

Mawhinney flash saw his chance to pass Mawhinney and grabbed it. He blasted out the fairway and two-putted by a birdie to take the works with a 36-hole aggregate of 139 and turned in a fine performance that the experts will be watched in the amateur fight that opens today.

Mawhinney, making his first appearance in the Canadian Junior championship, has all the equipment to give Kesselring a fight for the title. He said "it just got too tough at the last one." Mawhinney won his provincial title this year on the coast with a remarkable 139 for the 36-hole test— the lowest ever in history ever to win a junior provincial championship.

Point Anne Leafs Defeat CNR In Fourth Straight Game To Enter Intermediate 'A' Series

Turn Back Veterans by 12-10 Score in Wild Loosely-Played Game; Vern Goyer Banished From Game Following Attack on Official

In one of the wildest most erratic baseball playdowns seen in some time in which both teams made the ball away by costly mistakes, Point Anne Leafs defeated the CNR Veterans of the National Railway War Veterans 12-10 at Exhibition Park last night for their fourth straight win of the playoff series and the right to enter the Intermediate "A" playdowns.

Point Anne will meet the Kingston "A" representatives in the first round of the O.A.S.A. series the dates of which will be published as soon as announced.

The game last night was a grand comedy of errors garnished with practically every thing fast could happen in a ball game. Both squads came through with some real fielding and but by way of demonstrating their versatility, managed to tossed the ball around with reckless abandon while runners loitered across the plate.

Point Anne scored twelve runs for nine hits and committed 14 errors. On the other hand the Vets grabbed themselves ten runs for five hits and nine bobbles aided. Two home runs rearred to the deeper pastures both of them going to Point Anne batters, Mallory and Bradshaw, Bradshaw fortify hit to deep centre field in the ninth with one aboard actually turned the tide in favor of the Point-ers. Going to bat time the game had been a scoring nip-and-tuck affair with first one squad then the leading and then the other.

Johnny Bawden started for the losers and pitched two hit ball for three innings for two runs, during the fourth inning Genereaux singled, Mallory smashed out a home run and Bawden was taken out with Jim Hunter going to his relief.

Hunter retired the side with two out and went on to pitch six-hit ball for the rest of the game. But errors crept in and with the mates' dropping easy flies and throwing the ball around the park they sent ever eight runs to clinch the game and series.

Marty Halloran went the route for the Leafs and allowed only 9 hits; three of them off the bat of Leo Goyer, Veterans' right fielder. But the Pointers were in left for as far as errors were concerned. Halloran, Vetz and the six innings committed no less than four bobbles which with one bit sent three Veterans scampering across the plate.

The Leafs scored three runs in the second off two hits, three errors and a walk. They tied it in the fifth and singles in the seventh and ninth frames.

The Pointers scored a brace in the second to make the score 3-2 and added four more in the fourth off three hits, one a homer by Mallory and a walk. They scored six singles in the fourth and seventh, two more in the eighth and one in the ninth when Bradshaw's homer with one aboard put the game in the bag for the Sedore crew.

There was plenty of excitement even if the ball occupied second place.

A base on balls and two hits including a two-run triple by Vetz gave the Veterans their first lead in the second inning. Bats counted two runs in the third inning on hits by Spencer and Aquino and a walk to Rankin. Aquino's double scored the other two men.

In the fifth inning Rankin led off with a single and was promptly brought in by Spencer's double. Two hits, one a double by Rankin, gave the Sheenem their last run in the inning.

McTaggart went the distance for the winners striking out seven, walking two, and giving up nine hits for four runs. Burtt went the route for the losers issuing three walks, striking out nine, and giving up ten hits for nine runs.

Next at the plate for the winners was Murphy, who got three hits in four trips. Spencer of Bata had a perfect evening getting three hits in three trips.

HOWIE FOX WINS 14TH VICTORY FOR SYRACUSE CHIEFS

Pitcher Headed for 20-Game Season and Another Chance in Big Leagues

(By the Associated Press)

Howie Fox, lanky righthander of Syracuse Chiefs is headed for the first 20-game victory of his organized baseball career and another shot at a major league berth.

The strapping 185-pounder, one of the standout pitchers in the International League, last night turned back Rochester Red Wings 4-0 for his 14th victory and his fourth shutout. He held the Wings to six hits, didn't walk a batter and fanned two. It was his 16th complete game in 21 starts.

Meanwhile Jersey City split a double header with the Leafs while the Royals dropped a 6-5 decision to Newark Bears.

After Jack Kraus blanked the Leafs, 3-0 on three safeties in the seven innings, Jersey City Leafs came back to take the nightcap 5-2.

The Leafs snapped a 2-2 tie in the eighth inning of the aftermath with a three-run rally. Luke Hamlin, who went the route to post his 12th win, singled in two of the Leafs' runs in the eighth.

At Montreal, Joe Collins' handle hit in the third overtime frame with a runner on second broke up the game in favor of the Braves.

The last-place Baltimore Orioles stopped Buffalo Bisons, 4-3 behind the seven-hit pitching of Ray Post who fanned seven in gaining his ninth win.

Willingdon Cup Won by Ontario

By W. E. WHEATLEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Royal Quebec Golf Club, Boischatel, Que., Aug. 12 (CP) — Canada's interprovincial team competition for amateur golfers quickly became a matter of history today, with the Willingdon Cup in Ontario's hands for the fourth successive time, and golfing interest immediately centred on the 43rd annual Canadian Amateur championship that got under way this afternoon.

Ontario won the coveted trophy yesterday over the Royal Quebec course with an aggregate medal score of 614 for the four-man team. But in winning, the Ontario golfers fell far short of setting any record for the cup competition that began in 1927 when Lord Willingdon, the Governor-General at up the trophy for annual play.

The cup-winning 614 compared with the record score of 583 set by Ontario at Montreal Mount Bruno in 1939, just before Abe was ended competition until last year, when the Ontario team again won, that time at Edmonton with 589.

Ontario's star was Rudy Horvath of Windsor, with 149, made up of a sub-par 70 and 79. Ontario finished strongly in the second 18 holes of play yesterday to overcome a smaller lead set up by Alberta at the half-way mark of the 36-hole event.

British Columbia in fourth place after 18 holes, pulled into the runner-up spot with a total of 620, followed by Alberta with 628.

Quebec was fourth with 641, then South Ontario with 648, the New Brunswick-Prince Edward Island combination sixth with 649, and Saskatchewan seventh with 658.

The Manitoba team was forced to withdraw because of illness of Howard Bennett after 18 holes of play. At that time Manitoba was trailing the pace-setting Albertans by only two strokes.

Halifax, Aug. 12 (CP)—When deep summer comes to the Maritimes and the racing circuit is in full swing even baseball takes the pulling power that draws the fans to a closed or no race-tracks in Canada's unsullied stronghold of racing.

Gerry (New Glasgow News) Gilfoy explains and he should urge that brings sports lovers out to spend an afternoon around the baseball park.

I was reading somewhere about Kenn Guy who was saying that along with bad booze and the television, horse-racing came next to his list of the evils of his day." Gerry quotes his favorite character. "The gut must be suffering from the jimjams or else he must have backed the wrong pony one time, because anybody who can see anything wrong with horse-racing must be a brass-hatted nitwit.

"Horse-racing is a noble sport that is enjoyed, not only by many men, but by every thoroughbred knows to the fact. We do not see a mental flaw in this old work-a-day world of sloth and greed and envy, power that we can afford to taboo the racetrack because an occasional crack-pot backs the wrong nag.

"Critics who object to horse-racing should try it—it will do them good like medicine. One is as much a tonic as a hundred bad milliter.

Pat (Charlottetown Guardian) Powers reports that night racing under floodlights, another innovation in the island provinces which likes to be called "The Province of Canada," went over with a bang in Charlottetown. It drew a crowd of more than 5,000 from Charlottetown's 15,000 population.

VISITORS EXCHANGE CURRENCY BEFORE CROSSING BORDER

Fort Erie, Aug. 12 — (CP) — Canada appears to be attracting more and more Canadian visitors as the flood at this border point approaches all-time high proportions. But the visitors are getting wise. Instead of bringing all their United States funds into Canada where they are at par with the Canadian dollar they exchange them before crossing the border, thus making as much as 7½ per cent on the exchange.

CHAPTER 4.

"Where's your foreign legion today?" she wanted to know.

Sherry said, "Out. Tony had an interview this afternoon about an assistant directors' job, and Sandro's working. I don't know where Kris is."

Marcia put the tray down on a brass table.

She said, "Eat most of the cakes, won't you? If I gain another pound I won't be able to wear my new broadcloth."

Sherry laughed and said she thought she could eat all of them, and the telephone rang. Marcia answered it and talked to a man about business.

She said, "Neither mind the excuses, Smith. That deal was set, till you gummed it up!"

Sherry sipped her creamy chocolate and thought it would be nice to be a business woman and say, "Never mind the excuses, Smith," to men. Marcia was nearly forty though, and that made a difference.

When Marcia was finished she came back to the fire and sat down.

"What it very important?" Sherry wanted to know.

"No more than my right arm," Marcia told her, "but I'll pull it out of the fire yet."

Then she told Sherry about it and what she did. How she took trips around in the behind country and options on them. Then she either sold the option or got people to operate the mine and had herself cut in.

It all sounded lovely to Sherry especially the trips through the mountains and the deserts and the big trees. She told Mona about it that night.

"I've got a lot of respect for that woman," Mona said. "She knows what it's all about."

Sherry said, "Don't you think it would be nice to ask her to our Christmas party?"

Mona shrugged. "O. K. by me, honey."

Sherry flew to the telephone. She asked Marcia to dinner at 3 o'clock Christmas Day and Marcia accepted.

"Swell," she said; "I'll bring the champagne."

Sherry ran back to the kitchen. She said, "Mona, guess what! Marcia's going to bring champagne!"

Mona said, "The party begins to sound like a party."

There next day we Saturday and Mona stayed downtown in the afternoon with Brothers.

Sherry cleaned the house thoroughly and polished the brass and silver.

In the afternoon the things came from the grocer's. Sherry counted them over carefully and regarded the turkey with admiration. This was going to be a real Christmas.

Mona was late getting home. She was flushed and her eyes sparkled and she carried a large expensive looking box.

She said, "I got my Christmas present from George! Wait a minute!" and she went into the bedroom and shut the door. Sherry listened excitedly to the tissue wrappings being rustled, and after a moment Mona came out again. She was wearing the camel-hair coat with the sable collar.

Sherry's eyes widened.

She said, "Oh, it's gorgeous, Mona!" very sincerely. "But—but should you—"

Mona said, "Wait till I tell you about it."

It seemed Brothers had been asking Mona what she wanted for Christmas for a long while. Mona had said, "Oh, just any little thing. After all, it's only the thought, you know." But today she had managed to pass the store where the coat was, and let Brothers catch her look of wistful admiration. He had wanted her to try it on and become the delighted little beast Mona would let herself be persuaded.

Because of the way Mona told the story Sherry had to laugh about it, but after she was in bed and Mona asleep, she thought about it for a long time.

Christmas Day was clear and cold.

Everything that could possibly have been done the day before had been done, and it was still early when Sherry reviewed the icebox with satisfaction. The fruit cocktail were in their glasses and the cranberry sauce sliced. Olives and celery and jellies had only to be served, and the hard sauce was ready for the plum pudding.

At quarter to three Tony and Sandro arrived looking clean and tidy. Sandro carried a package, but Tony pulled his out of his pocket and said, "Doesn't that turkey smell grand?"

Then they both said, "Merry Christmas," and laughed and seemed a little embarrassed about offering their packages.

Sherry said, "There's something for each of you under the tree," and Tony and Sandro scrambled the small gifts that Sherry had bought them and were very well pleased.

Sherry opened her package. Sandro's was a bottle of very pink bath salts, and Tony's was a little enameled compact. They all thanked one another a lot and Sherry put the compact in her pocket and went out to the kitchen when Mona was.

Mona said, "Now let me do things here Mona, honey, you've done everything."

Sherry showed her the compact and Mona laughed. "Swell," she said. "Fourteen carat tin, isn't it?"

Sherry smiled.

"Anyway, I can use it."

She lifted the cover, and in a minute Marcia came into the kitchen.

"Season's greetings and so forth," she said, "Here's the champagne."

There were two big bottles and Sherry put them in the icebox. Marcia made herself useful and Mona offered her a drink. She said Marcia was willing to help because she wanted to eat.

Kris arrived promptly at 3 o'clock. He kissed Sherry's hand and then looked at her steadily for a moment.

"You're beautiful," he said, and handed her a package. Sherry was interested in the feel of it. She opened it quickly. It was a beautifully bound volume of Byron, and Kris had written on the flyleaf, "Sherry and Sandro from Danish and then, "from Kris." The Danish word meant nothing lovely," she found out. Sherry was touched and a little thrilled.

The dinner was a success. The turkey was golden brown and champagne cold and sparkling. They all ate a great deal and talked and laughed a lot.

It was dark when they finally finished and Sherry lighted the Christmas tree. Mona seemed restless and looked at the clock frequently. After a while Sherry asked her what was the matter.

Mona said, "Why, nothing at all. What do you mean?" But her voice had no color to it.

Marcia said, "That tone of voice always means a man."

Mona was annoyed. She said, "Aren't you one, though?"

Marcia looked good-naturedly, and the telephone rang. Sherry was sitting next to it, but Mona got there first.

She said, "All right, in about ten minutes."

She hung up and turned to Sherry and the others. "You'll all excuse me, won't you?" she said, and put on her new coat and went out.

Sherry stirred up the fire. She suddenly felt cold.

Tony suggested that the rest of them go down to Kris's and the others thought it was a wonderful idea.

New Year's had come and gone.

Sherry and Mona were having dinner in the breakfast nook and Mona was eating listlessly. She was pale and looked a little tired. After the coffee she got up.

"Do you mind if I don't help with the dishes tonight, honey? I've got a headache."

"No, I'm sorry!" Sherry said. "Why don't you go lie down?"

Mona went into the bedroom and Sherry started clearing up the dishes. Why was it, she wondered, that when you were unhappy you felt a little sick. But what was the matter with Mona? What was happening to her? It was George Brothers, of course. Sherry knew that. Mona had gone to a New Year's Eve party with him and had not come home all night.

She had explained that the party had been given by a woman she knew at the Ambassador, and that it had broken up so late the woman had insisted on Mona staying.

Sherry had believed her because she wanted to believe her.

Mona had not elaborated on the party though, which was funny. Usually she remembered all sorts of little things to tell Sherry, and it was since that night that she had been listless and edgy by turns.

It rained the next day and it was cold and windy. Sherry was glad she did not have to go to the grocer's. There would be plenty for dinner if she and Mona nibbled and had creamed tuna on toast. She put the tuna on to heat in a fire in the fireplace.

While she was eating lunch Sherry suddenly remembered that she had put a sample of thread in Mona's handbag, and then forgotten to tell her about matching it. There was a telephone. Maybe she could still catch Mona before she went out.

The girls were not allowed to receive telephone calls, and Sherry had formed the habit of calling Brothers, who relayed the messages. She thought it was ironical to have to telephone the man himself because his employes were not allowed calls.

His secretary answered. No, Mr. Brothers was not in and she did not know when to expect him. Mr. Brothers was leaving town tonight for a few weeks, but he would be in the office again before he left. Would Sherry leave a message?

She said, "No, thank you, it isn't important," and hung up.

Suddenly a cloud lifted from her heart. Brothers was going away!

Sherry decided to fuss a little over dinner. They would have it in front of the fire. The creamed tuna on toast would not do any more though. Maybe oysters Mona loved oysters, An oyster stew!

Sherry was in high spirits now. She would wrap up warmly and go to the boulevard. It was fun to walk in the rain. She would get the thread herself and the oysters and some marshmallows to toast after dinner.

It was after four when Sherry finished her shopping and started home.

The wind still howled and between gusts the smoke from the chimney was flattened dismally along the crooked roof when Sherry saw the house through the rain. She was glad the fire was still burning.

She took her overshoes off outside on the dry step and let herself in.

She put her packages on the table and took the oysters out to the kitchen. She dumped them in a bowl so they would not soak through the container, and put them in the icebox. Then she put her overalls in the sink and hung her coat over a chair.

She went back to the living room and stirred up the fire. There she started into the bedroom. She stopped in the door.

Kept the bed was all mussed as though things had been lying on the bed. The dressing table looked empty. There was a note on it.

Sherry walked over to it very slowly and picked it up.

She read:

"Sherry Dear,

"I'm sorry you weren't home. It made it easier, I'm going away with George. I don't expect you to understand, but without money life isn't worth living.

"Forget about me, honey.

"Mona".
